American capitalism gone with a whimper

The irony of this article having appeared in the English edition of Pravda defies description. Why can a Russian newspaper print what follows, yet the American media can’t – or won’t – see it?

It must be said that, like the breaking of a great dam, the American descent into Marxism is happening with breathtaking speed against the backdrop of a passive, hapless sheeple, excuse me dear reader, I meant people.

True, this situation has been very well prepared on and off for the past century, especially the past twenty years. The initial testing grounds was conducted upon our Holy Russia, and a bloody test it was. But we Russians would not just roll over and give up our freedoms and our souls, no matter how much money Wall Street had poured into the fists of the Marxists.

Those lessons were taken and used to properly prepare the American populace for the surrender of their souls and freedoms to the whims of their elites and betters.

First, the population was dumbed down through a politicized and substandard educational system based on pop culture, rather than the classics. Americans know more about their favorite TV dramas than the drama in DC that directly affects their lives. They care more for their “right” to choke down a McDonalds or Burger King burger than for their constitutional rights. Then they turn around and lecture us about our rights and about our “democracy.” Pride blind the foolish.

Next their faith in God was destroyed, until their churches, all tens of thousands of different “branches and denominations” were for the most part little more than Sunday circuses and their televangelists and top protestant mega preachers happy to sell out their souls and flocks to be on the “winning” side of one pseudo Marxist politician or another. Their flocks may complain, but when explained that they would be on the “winning” side, their flocks were ever so quick to reject Christ in hopes for earthly power. Even our Holy Orthodox churches are scandalously liberal in America.

United workers of the world?

The final collapse came with the election of Barack Obama. His speed in the past three months has been truly impressive, spending and money printing as a record not just in America’s short history but in the world’s. If this keeps up for more than another year, and there is no sign that it will not, America at best will resemble the Weimar Republic and at worst Zimbabwe.

These past two weeks have been the most breathtaking of all. First came the announcement of a planned redesign of the American Byzantine tax system by the very thieves who used it to bankroll their thefts, losses and swindles: hundreds of billions of dollars, making our Russian oligarchs look like little more than ordinary street thugs in comparison. Yes, the Americans have beaten our own thieves in the sheer volumes. Should we congratulate them?

United Scam Artists

These men, of course, are not an elected panel but appointees picked from the very financial oligarchs and their henchmen – now gorging themselves on trillions of American dollars, one bailout after another. They are also usurping the rights, duties, and powers of the American congress (parliament). Again, congress has put up little more than a whimper to its masters.

Five-Year Plan

Then came Barack Obama’s command that GM’s (General Motors) president step down from the leadership of his company. That is correct, dear reader, in the land of “pure” free markets, an American president now has the power, the self-given power, to fire CEOs, and we can assume other employees, of private companies at will. Come hither, go thither – the centurion commands his minions.

So it should be no surprise that the American president has followed this up with a “bold” move of declaring that he and another group of unelected, chosen stooges will now redesign the entire automotive industry and will even be the guarantors of automobile policies. I am sure that, if given the chance, they would happily try and redesign it for the whole of we “fall back” to normal time. Let’s stay there. Rebels do not “spring forward” in 2013. If the lockstepping ones go to “daylight saving” again that’s fine, but we’ll just hum along while they sing that extra hour away toiling for the banksters. To beat the traffic, or for some other reason, opening however many minutes early should be locally coordinated by schools and businesses. Let us not go messing with any sundials next March when the feds dictate: “Jump!” Quaint? O, but fun – hearing the “change” crew say our clocks are off – and so easy adjusting for them. Obedience is about regimentation. Here at TFF we don’t play that game.

GERMAN newspapers want an audit of that country’s gold bullion, much of which is at the New York Federal Reserve, whose vaults have not been audited for decades. And, even back then, only 5% of the bars were tested for purity. The German people want their gold brought home.

KISS UP. “I am prepared to use all elements of American power” to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon, Obama answered to a questionnaire by the American Jewish Committee aired Oct. 18, “including a political effort to further isolate Iran, a diplomatic effort to sustain our coalition, an economic effort that has imposed crippling sanctions, and a military effort to be prepared for any contingency.”

FROM BRITAIN: “Now there’s more ice at South Pole than ever,” headlines the Daily Mail. “(So much for global warming thawing Antarctica!)” Yes, that last part about global warming is also part of the headline. “Ice around the South Pole has expanded to cover a record area, scientists revealed on October 12 – a month after saying that the North Pole had lost an unprecedented amount of its ice.”

CASH-STRAPPED, the U. S. Postal Service has reached its $15 billion debt limit as capped by Congress and can’t borrow more. The Postal Service hit that cap on Sept. 28, a spokesman confirmed, reinforcing the fact that its cash reserves are running dangerously low.

POLICE in the Mexican city of Tiripetio clashed with students protesting against a government launched curricular reform on October 15, arresting nearly 176 of them. The young demonstrators had taken to the streets in the country’s western Michoacan State, where they called on the government to resolve the dispute. That new program reduces the number of technical subjects while introducing more credit hours into English and computer science, which the students see as low-priority subjects.

KUWAIT. On Oct. 21 riot police used tear gas and rubber bullets, injuring 100 protesters and 11 policemen, as tens of thousands demonstrated against a new electoral law designed to beget a USrael-approved rubber-stamp parliament.

ONE YEAR AFTER. October 20 saw Libya’s new puppet regime still fighting Gaddafi loyalists at Bani Walid. Some 26 people were killed, over 200 wounded, as pro-junta forces pushed into central Bani Walid. Earlier that day, the youngest son of slain Libyan ruler Muammar Gaddafi was killed during fighting in the city. Hundreds of Libyan families and foreign workers fled Bani Walid to save their lives on the anniversary of Gaddafi’s murder by NATO backed terrorists in his hometown of Sirte.

MOSCOW is installing in its southern military region an advanced anti-aircraft missile system as a response to Turkey’s deployment of a NATO missile system. Russian Col. Igor Gorbul said the army will complete the installation of S-400 anti-aircraft missiles by the end of this year.

ANOTHER setup. Thinking to blow up the Federal Reserve in NYC, according to authorities, the man thought he had a 1,000-pound bomb. Nafis took responsibility for his government-assisted plans to “destroy America” by going after its economy. He referred to “our beloved Sheikh Osama bin Laden” in the statement, which was stored on a thumb drive.

And if you believe that one, I have some of Saddam’s nuclear weapons to sell you! Besides, would you really be sad if the Federal Reserve was destroyed after almost 100 years of Ponzi-scheme bankers looting the average American worker? I mean, just think about it; the Federal Reserve, a private central bank issuing all the public currency as a loan at interest, is the kind of stuff this nation fought a revolution to be free of!

Change? Not yet, says Billy

“AUSTIN, Oct. 10 – The University of Texas at Austin’s race-conscious admission policy is essential to the school’s goal of preparing all students for life in a diverse world, said UT-Austin President Bill Powers in a telephone call with reporters on Wednesday.

“Powers took questions from those who couldn’t make it to Washington D.C. to hear oral arguments presented to the U. S. Supreme Court in the Fisher vs. University of Texas case.

“ ‘I think that we all hope for a time when the use of race in admissions to create equal opportunity is not necessary, but we’re not there yet,’ Powers said.

“The University claims to be in line with the Supreme Court’s ruling in the 2003 Grutter vs. Bollinger case, which allowed the University of Michigan Law School to use race as one of many factors to attain a desired ‘critical mass’ of minority students. The question in the court now is how a university can define critical mass.

“ ‘Critical mass is to perform a particular educational goal and that goal is so that a sufficient number of classrooms for a sufficient number of students as they matriculate through UT and in the campus generally have the kind of educational environment that is going to prepare them for working in an increasingly global and diverse world,’ Powers said. ‘We’re not there yet, but we’ll learn more as we get closer.’ ” – The Dallas Morning News

President Bill, you’re not creating equal opportunities, merely putting ideas into the heads of impressionable young adults that they can blast off to the stars without first planting their feet on solid ground. If some haven’t already proven themselves capable of keeping pace with those who’ve come to learn and whose high school records attest as much, why waste the latter’s best years at an educational speed geared down to the slowest common denominator?

Didn’t we secede from the British nanny

RUSSIA has just completed its largest nuclear drills, with Vladimir Putin himself leading them. What are they preparing for? Does this have anything to do with Russia putting nuclear missiles in Cuba again recently? How does this new development tie into our own Congress’s Bill HR6566 which orders FEMA to prepare for mass deaths in America?

The First Freedom’s prestidigitatious award goes this month to UT Austin’s President Bill Powers.

State to become free of such impostures? King George wouldn’t heed the grievances of our forebears; he wanted unquestioning obedience, and it looks like those royalists in the District of Corruption have yours.

Today’s problem with much of so-called higher education is its “critical mass” of “equality”-at-whatever-cost-to-excellence administrators such as yourself risking the meltdown of everything we hold dear. And for what, sir – equally-shared mediocrity?

Wrong, sir. When UT Austin hires your kind we’ve arrived.

Affirmative Action goes much further than just admitting less-qualified Negroes and Mexicans to higher education ahead of those better qualified to learn. It includes also the hiring of race traitor administrators like William Powers.

Ever frugal, she asked that the notice simply state, “Angus is dead.” The newspaper editor told her that death notices had to be a minimum of six words. “Fine,” she replied. “Make it: ‘Angus is dead; Volvo for sale.’”

Great homeschooling tips for the best education

homeschoolingreviews.net
Homeschooling your children is a great choice for parents who want complete control of their child’s education. Teaching from home is not without its difficulties. You need expert advice and this article can be a great start.

It is vital that there is one area of your house designated as a “school” or “work” area. It is so easy to be distracted at home, so giving your kids a place to study helps to keep them on task. Get a small desk, some bookshelves and keep all the classroom material in one location.

There are lots of fun and unique aspects to homeschooling that public schools cannot compete with. To gauge progress, compare your child’s performance to others in public schools by using standardized tests. If your children have trouble with these tests, you may wish to engage a tutor for help.

Plan learning activities on family vacations. From zoos, aquariums and museums to historical landmarks or Broadway plays, the right area has plenty of teaching options. You can take one day to learn something on vacation. The whole family will learn and have fun, too!

Field trips

Plan regular outings or field trips as part of your curriculum. While lots of learning is done in the classroom, field trips can be a great learning opportunity as well. You can take the kids any number of places. Is a carnival going on? Do you think teaching your child how to shop for groceries is necessary? Be creative and look for new, wild places to learn.

Before deciding to homeschool, honestly assess your teaching qualifications and whether you would be a suitable teacher to ensure success. Think about your parenting relationship to reveal whether you have to resolve some issues before homeschooling can start.

Remember that even if you aren’t teaching art, you should use art when giving lessons. Draw pictures about things you are learning or make a quilt with fabric. They can be creative with sculpture, acting or singing; they are limited only by their imagination. Immersion techniques can be great for getting kids to learn the material, and therefore any relevant activities can help get the results you want.

Be strict about your children getting all homework done. Do not allow them to slack off just because the teacher is their parent. Let them know the importance of schoolwork.

You do not have to follow a strict course of studies. They are valuable tools, but not

Your “representatives” – forbidden by the Southern Puberty Lechery Center, a federal Affirmative Action Apparatchik and those new voting machines to display such reminders in a building full of judges, lawyers and politicians – have banished the Ten Commandments from Alabama’s Supreme Court now for 110 months.

your boss. It is important that you use tools that are high in quality so you can design a lesson plan customized for your child. After all, homeschooling is about unique lesson plans.

Are you thinking about homeschooling multiple children? Before starting, it is vital that you should accurately assess your current ability to discipline those children at home. Without setting forth clear expectations for behavior, keeping everyone focused and making progress may become difficult. Evaluating your own weaknesses as a disciplinarian can help you prevent problems before they occur.

Homeschooling is an amazing adventure for anyone brave enough to engage in it. The children come out educated, both in life and knowledge. Sometimes it can be

Moneychangers and 501(c)3 must exit

By Michael Hoffman

October 16, 2012 – I finished my eighth book, Usury in Christendom, today.

It was delayed an additional two weeks by what my wife calls my German perfectionism (although that’s a euphemism; what actually she calls it is German obsessive-compulsivism).

Whatever it may be, I can’t be tempted to add to the book any longer because this afternoon it went to one of the top quality American printers in the U. S. (We could get it printed for less in the Far East, but we want the work performed by an American company and American workers, not offshore).

The books should be in our warehouse by December 15 or 20.

We sell it ahead of its publication to raise the funds to pay for printing the books, and for printing envelopes, flyers and paying postage to mail hard copy advertisements to the customers on our physical mailing list. We also must try to raise the money to buy print advertising in periodicals.

Usury in Christendom is 416 pages, paperback and illustrated.

Defining the problem

I’m not interested in writing books that someone else has already written, so this work offers what I hope are new revelations into how we came to be ruled by the Money Power. I hope it will strengthen and edify those who are involved in trying to restore the economy to a Christ-like standard, according to Christian principles, rather than the criminal politics of the den of thieves who have bought the churches, the government, educational system, the tough, though.

If one teaching style just isn’t working for you try something else. That is the good thing about homeschooling; you are free to try whatever you please just as long as that child learns the material. There are so many different ways to teach a subject. Do not be afraid to take a new approach.

Consider a computer-based homeschool curriculum. As technology gets better and media and, as even a cursory glance at this year’s elections will demonstrate, the Republican and Democrat parties.

The evil we face has money behind it. Christians are living an illusion on this subject.

Time to flog

I have endeavored in this book to give the excuse-makers and alibi-offerers no ground to stand on; no room to wiggle out of the consequences of living a lie about what their churches teach, and what was taught at the flowering of our civilization.

I hope Usury in Christendom puts the final nail in the coffin of our illusions about interest on loans of money.

Harsh truths must be faced without flinching if we are to restore our nation in accord with the will of God. To do this, the disobedience must stop.

I’d like to thank those folks, mostly the working poor and middle class, who sent donations in the past eight weeks that sustained me while working intensively, and more or less constantly, to finish a book which began more than two years ago.

We did not have funds for a large printing of the first edition. The pre-publication sale will be of books from the first edition, while supplies last. If you want to be certain that we reserve your copy for shipping in December, you might want to send in your payment in early November at the latest, in case the book does sell out quickly.

I experienced joy in researching and writing this history. First, because I felt it was the will of God; and second due to the extraordinary adventure that is revisionist history. Revisionists don’t proceed from an axiom and then try to gather information better, it is important that you teach your child how to properly navigate a computer. Why not have them do their school work online? There are many advantages to this. One benefit – the material is up to date. Another good thing is that you, as your child’s teacher, can check on his progress without having to keep up with his papers. It also leaves less school material lying around.

Learning a sense of responsibility is a part of homeschooling. Let your children help with household tasks; have them take care of their own rooms and clean up after themselves. A good sense of responsibility and a strong work ethic is a big advantage to homeschooling.

Reading aloud

Read with your children. Reading aloud is becoming a lost art form and should be included in your curriculum. Your child’s age should not be a factor on whether you read together or not. Begin when they are young and help them develop a love for reading. As each child ages, teach how to express emotion while reading. Reading aloud will prove decisive for that student to acquire a rich vocabulary.

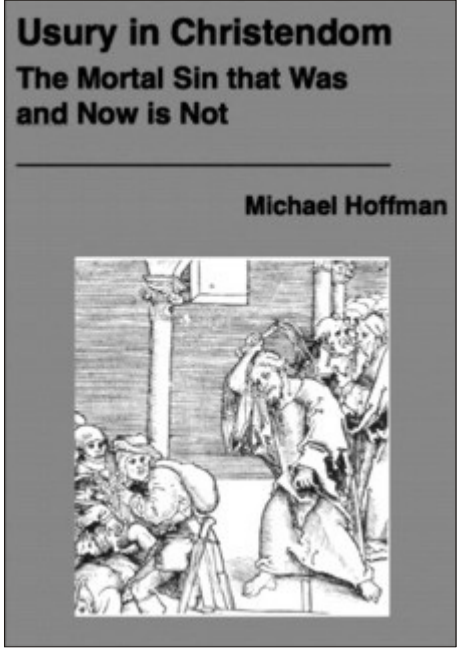

Don’t get discouraged if your kids aren’t excited about homeschooling. There will be plenty of time for them to warm up to the idea. You’re the person that they need to see excited about it. Be committed to excellence; make what they’re learning interesting. When they see you having fun, they’ll be more inclined to do the same.

You’re sure to become a homeschooling success! Nothing stands in the path of a well-educated instructor, so go forth and teach your kids as much as possible. When they are successes themselves later in life, you will be justifiably proud.

So ignore those online naysayers trying to de-fuse this explosive new movement!

that will corroborate it. We follow the trail of facts wherever they lead and however they undermine our own preconceptions and prejudices.

I don’t know if I’ll ever jump out of a space capsule at 120,000 feet, like that heroic Austrian pilot, but sometimes being on top of a mountain of information which no one else has seen or connected the dots to is just about as breathtaking, at least to a bookworm like yours truly.

America’s schools: breeding grounds for compliant citizens

By John W. Whitehead
rutherford.org

“Public school reform is now justified in the dehumanizing language of national security, which increasingly legitimates the transformation of schools into adjuncts of the surveillance and Police State... students are increasingly subjected to disciplinary apparatuses which limit their capacity for critical thinking, mold them into consumers, test them into submission, strip them of any sense of social responsibility and convince large numbers of poor minority students that they are better off under the jurisdiction of the criminal justice system than by being valued members of the public schools.”

— Professor Henry Giroux
For those hoping to better understand how and why we arrived at this dismal point in our nation’s history, where individual freedoms, privacy and human dignity have been sacrificed to the gods of security, expediency and corpocracy, look no farther than America’s public schools.

Once looked to as the starting place for imparting principles of freedom and democracy to future generations, America’s classrooms are becoming little more than breeding grounds for compliant citizens. The moment young people walk into school, they increasingly find themselves under constant surveillance: they are photographed, fingerprinted, scanned, x-rayed, sniffed and snooped on. Between metal detectors at the entrances, drug-sniffing dogs in the hallways and surveillance cameras in the classrooms and elsewhere, many of America’s schools look more like prisons than learning facilities.

Ear-tagging the goyim

Add to this the epidemic of arresting schoolchildren and treating them as if they are dangerous criminals, and you have the makings of a perfect citizenry for our emerging Police State – one that can be easily cowed, controlled and directed. Now comes the latest development in the sad deconstruction of our schools: “smart” identification cards containing Radio Frequency Identification (RFID) tags that allow school officials to track every step students take. So small that they are barely detectable to the human eye, RFID tags produce a radio signal by which the wearer’s precise movements can be constantly monitored.

A pilot program using these RFID cards is being deployed at two schools in San Antonio, Texas’ Northside School District. In the so-called name of school safety, some 4,200 students at Jay High School and Jones Middle School are being required to carry these “smart” ID cards embedded with an RFID tracking chip which will actively broadcast a signal at all times. Although the schools already boast 290 surveillance cameras, the cards will make it possible for school officials to track students’ whereabouts at all times.

School officials hope to expand the program to the district’s 112 schools, with a student population of 100,000. As always, there’s a money incentive hidden within these programs. In this case, it’s increased State funding for the school system. Although implementation of the system will cost $500,000, school administrators are hoping that if the school district is able to increase attendance by tracking the students’ whereabouts, they will be rewarded with up to $1.7 million from the State government.

High school sophomore Andrea Hernandez, who is actively boycotting the RFID cards, was told that “there will be consequences for refusal to wear an ID card.” Students who refuse to take part in the ID program won’t be able to access essential services like the cafeteria and library, nor will they be able to purchase tickets to extracurricular activities. Hernandez was prevented from voting for Homecoming King and Queen after school officials refused to verify her identity using her old ID card. According to Hernandez, teachers are even requiring students to wear the IDs when they want to use the bathroom. School officials reportedly offered to quietly remove the tracking chip from Andrea’s card if the sophomore would agree to wear the new ID, stop criticizing the program and publicly support the initiative. Hernandez refused the offer.

This is not the first time that schools have sprung RFID chips on unsuspecting students and their parents. Schools in California and Connecticut have tried similar systems, and Houston, Texas, began using RFID chips to track students as early as 2004. With the RFID business booming, a variety of companies, including AIM Truancy Solutions, ID Card Group and DataCard, market and sell RFID trackers to school districts throughout the country, claiming they can increase security and attendance. For example, AIM Truancy Solutions, a Dallas-based company, claims that its tracking system boosts attendance by twelve percent.

RFID tags are not the only surveillance tools being used on America’s young people. Chronically absent middle schoolers in Anaheim, California, have been enrolled in a GPS tracking program. As journalist David Rosen explains:

Each school day, the delinquent students get an automated “wake-up” phone call reminding them that they need to get to school on time. In addition, five times a day they are required to enter a code that tracks their locations: as they leave for school, when they arrive at school, at lunchtime, when they leave school and at 8:00 PM. These students are also assigned an adult “coach” who calls them at least three times a week to see how they are doing and help them find effective ways to make sure they get to school.

Some schools in New York, New Jersey and Missouri are tracking obese and overweight students with wristwatches that record their heart rates, movement and sleeping habits. Schools in San Antonio have chips in their lunch food trays, which allow administrators to track the eating habits of students. Schools in Michigan’s second largest school district broadcast student activity caught by CCTV cameras on the walls of the hallways in real time to let students know they’re being watched.

Testing the limits

Some school districts have even gone so far as to electronically track students without notifying their parents. In 2010, it was revealed that a Pennsylvania school district had given students laptops installed with software that allowed school administrators to track their behavior at home. This revelation led to the threat of a class-action lawsuit, which resulted in the school district settling with irate students and parents for $600,000. Similarly, in 2003, a Tennessee middle school placed cameras in the school’s locker rooms, capturing images of children changing before basketball practice. Thankfully, the U. S. Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals struck down the practice in 2008, ruling that students have an expectation of privacy in locker rooms.

Clearly, there’s something more sinister afoot than merely tracking which students are using the bathroom and which are on lunch break. Concerned parent Judy Messer understands what’s at stake. “We do not want our children to be conditioned that tracking is normal or even acceptable or mandatory,” she shared.

“Conditioned” is the key word, of course. As Richard Hackman and Greg Oldham recognized in their book, Work Redesign, laboratory animals, children and institutionalized adults “are necessarily dependent on powerful others for many of the things they most want and need, and their behavior usually can be shaped with relative ease.” Taking those ideas one step

12-year-old shoots intruder

By Chris McKinnon
news9.com

BRYAN COUNTY, Oklahoma – This 12-year-old girl took matters into her own hands during a home invasion in southeast Oklahoma.

It happened on October 17 when the girl was home alone. She told police a stranger rang the doorbell, then went around to the back door and kicked it in. She called her mom, Debra St. Clair, who told her to get the family gun, hide in a closet and call 911.

That was when St. Clair dropped what she was doing and raced home.

“I drove home at a really fast pace to try to get to her, and when I got here the police were already here. And they had the suspect,” she said.

During that time, the intruder made his way through the house. St. Clair’s daughter told deputies the man came into the room where she was hiding and began to open up the closet door. That was when the 12-year-old had to make a life-saving decision.

“And what we understand right now, he was turning the doorknob when she fired further, psychologist Bruce Levine noted, “Behaviorism and consumerism, two ideologies which achieved tremendous power in the twentieth century, are cut from the same cloth. The shopper, the student, the worker and the voter are all seen by consumerism and behaviorism the same way: passive, conditionable objects.”

To return to what I was saying about schools being breeding grounds for compliant citizens, if Americans have come to view freedom as expedient and expendable, it is only because that’s what they’ve been taught in the schools, by government leaders and by the corporations who run the show.

More and more Americans are finding themselves institutionalized from cradle to grave, from government-run daycares and public schools to nursing homes. In between, they are fed a constant, mind-numbing diet of pabulum consisting of entertainment news, mediocre leadership, and technological gadgetry, which keeps them sated and distracted and unwilling to challenge the status quo.

All the while, in the name of the greater good and in exchange for the phantom promise of security, the government strips away our rights one by one, monitoring our conversations, chilling our expression, searching our bodies and our possessions, doing away with our due process rights, reversing the burden of proof and rendering us suspects in a Surveillance State.

Whether or not the powers-that-be, by their actions, are consciously attempting to create a compliant citizenry, the result is the same nevertheless for young and old alike.

EDITOR’S NOTE

Education. It means a leading out – presumably from ignorance. But, in a taxpayer-funded school system when that program becomes indoctrination (emphasis on the in), you might want to compliment some young person’s capacity for investigating outside the box with a Christmas subscription to The First Freedom. It’ll boost that student’s ego. And my faith in you.

Her bullet hit the intruder, whom deputies then identified as 32-year-old Stacey Jones. He fled but didn’t get far before officers took him down.

through the door,” said the Bryan County Undersheriff Ken Golden.

He took off but did not get far.

“He was sitting down, the policemen had him apprehended at the end of the block. All I saw was some blood coming down his back. I’m not exactly sure where his injury was, but I saw some blood there,” explained St. Clair.

Jones was taken to a Texas hospital by helicopter after the incident. An investigator on the case said Jones was released from the hospital a day later and extradited to the Bryan County Jail.

The 12-year-old girl was not injured during the ordeal.

How to identify the true enemies of freedom

By Brandon Smith
alt-market.com

The greatest and most often exploited weakness of any revolution for freedom is the inability of the downtrodden populace to identify the true enemy. History is littered with the shattered remnants of rebellions that were built upon legitimate causes but suffered because of misdirection and faulty assumptions. For centuries, the real culprits of tyranny have found ways to redirect the ire of those they harmed in their quest for power, usually by offering a tempting scapegoat that appeals to the public’s darker impulses; their biases, their prejudices, their fears, etc. Usually, this ends in an even more pervasive totalitarian environment as the insurgents and the scapegoats decimate each other while the elites sit back and enjoy the show.

Even the most successful battles against despotism, like the American Revolution, often only had a distant sense of who they were really fighting against. This is what makes the 21st Century extraordinarily unique in the annals of civilization. For the first time in human record, the common man has all the information necessary to examine and define the real culprits behind his subjugation. The truth is at our fingertips, all we have to do is reach out and take it...

Because of the decentralized nature of information flowing through the alternative web media, our ability to generate opposition to organized elitism has never been greater. However, this also means the stakes have never been higher.

They understand well that their criminality is clearly visible, and eventually they will be personally subject to the rage of the people. This next fight could be the last for them.

Their playbook may be old, but the tactics they use can always be applied on a grander and more terrible scale. Not only will they pursue whatever menacing distractions necessary to occupy the attentions of the public, they will also attempt to pose as guiding lights in the darkness they themselves created. They will hide behind broad generalized target groups; fabricated boogie men, branded and prepackaged like franchise coffee shops on every street corner of America’s collective psyche. Terrorists, traitors, saboteurs, whatever ethnic group happens to be convenient at the moment, whoever is easiest to present as a target for our projected malice; false enemies will be rolled out like a nightmare buffet.

If our nation and the rest of the world have any chance of achieving peace and liberty, it will be because those who choose to dissent against the totalitarian tide focus on the authentic virus invading and assimilating our culture. Some call them “elitists,” “collectivists,” “centralists,” etc. They sometimes even refer to themselves as such, but the most prominent and useful label today is that of “globalist.” That said, we must ask what it is that defines these people? What makes them who they are? The following is a list of behaviors and characteristics that have been common to oligarchs through most of history. Regardless of how a political or financial leader presents himself through rhetoric, if he displays these properties in action, he is more likely than not an opponent of individual freedom and an adversary to the principles of honor and conscience that all good men strive for.

1) They seek centralization of power.
Does your favorite political candidate, corporate “guru” or media shill promote globalization, economic harmonization, socialization, sacrificing the protections of sovereignty in the name of some “greater good” that never seems to come? Does every action he takes only appear to benefit a select elite? Does he regimentally remove options and choices from the system? Do all of his solutions ultimately lead to the same outcome? Do all the roads he builds converge towards less liberty for the masses and more control for government? Is his answer for every crisis to remove checks and balances and borders? Does he claim that sovereign and Constitutional protections get in the way of “progress”? Does he use phrases like “the greater good” or “sustainable development” on a regular basis? Add him to your list of potential mass murderers, and unfriend him on your social media accounts. He does not have your best interests at heart...

2) They enforce policies despite widespread disapproval.

In any healthy Republic, the political class is supposed to be the servant of the people. Their employment is supposed to be predicated on their willingness to hear and understand the wishes of their constituency. If a bill or policy arises that threatens the civil liberties or financial safety of the people, and they call for a representative to oppose it, that is exactly what he is supposed to do. If he does otherwise, and supports a damaging or unconstitutional bill while fully aware of massive voter resistance, it means he is not in fear for his job, which means his job has not necessarily been secured by our votes, which means he is likely working for somebody else; somebody who will benefit from the bill in question.

Traitors

Two perfect examples would be the passage of the banker bailout bills, and the indefinite detention provisions of the National Defense Authorization Act. Both were vehemently opposed by a majority of Americans on both sides of the so called political “aisle,” and yet they were given a majority support by our “representatives” in government. This reveals an ulterior motivation within our government that is, to put it bluntly, treasonous. If they voted for a liberty killing bill, then cross them off your roster of principled leaders and add them to your list of enemies...

3) They find ways to rationalize any behavior.

Sociopaths and psychopaths operate on their personal form of twisted rationalism. The magic of pure cold logic, untempered by conscience or intuitive wisdom, is that truth can become whatever we want it to be as long as our inner voice remains repressed. For them, any crime can be vindicated as long as a perceived benefit can somehow be derived. For a globalist oligarch, however, psychopathy goes far beyond mechanical moral relativism. They are well aware that their actions are an affront to human conscience, and they couldn’t care less. Instead, they use rationalism as a way to manipulate the public into accepting their maniacal behavior so that they can continue without interference.

Globalists are so convinced of their own intellectual superiority, they feel no desire for redemption or to compartmentalize their own evil. They embrace that evil fully as if a form of strength. One weakness of this philosophy is that it comes with a strange obsession: a desperate drive to inject moral relativism into all people around them. This exposes an inherent reliance on the surrounding environment, and dependency on one’s environment to reinforce a belief system is a significant psychological weakness.

The great power that truth holds over the empire of lies is that the truth is not contingent on mass perception; it exists regardless of how many people believe in it. It is autonomous. The truth has its own soul, and arises from the ashes again and again without benefit of mass recognition. Lies and perverted rationalizations require an astounding amount of energy and armies of the ignorant in order to exist. A foundation of lies is inferior, and thus, anyone who depends upon the existence of that foundation is also, by association, inferior. Globalists are, therefore, a sub-species, an unnecessary and outdated remnant of social evolution that should be allowed to finally fade out and die away.

4) They promote economic dependency.

Anyone who consistently says that you need him in order to survive has something to gain by your dependency. A good person or government seeks to make people independent and self reliant, so that they can survive on their own merits and participate in the construction of their own destinies. A manipulative person or government needs people to believe that without the services the despot provides all will come to ruin. Totalitarian control cannot exist unless we hand that control to them. If the man before you claims that there is no other way to live except through him or his system, no matter how charmingly he phrases it, add him to your list as a danger to your freedom.

5) They belong to a think tank.

I am usually apprehensive about using a broad brush to paint any single group or subset as fully criminal and beyond repair. This kind of methodology is used daily by globalists to create rifts in societies and lure people into destroying each other. However, I have tried to the utmost of my ability to find an influential think tank with ties to the government in our modern era that does not display the despicable behaviors listed so far, and for the life of me, I can’t find a single one. From the CFR to the Rand Corporation to the Washington Institute For Near East Policy, you will find many of the same exact writhing globalist tapeworms and most certainly the same exact philosophies of moral relativism on display. If they belong to a mainstream think tank, they are not a friend to liberty.

6) They cast no reflection in the mirror.

Or perhaps I’m thinking of a different kind of monster...

7) They promote military force as the primary means to achieve ideological objectives.

Do they confront the dynamic of every social and diplomatic problem with the use of military force and the death of those who disagree with them? Does every conflict between them and another culture end with the destruction of thousands if not millions? Do they flaunt a distinct kind of “my way or the highway to hell” attitude? Do they seem to crave war to the point that they are willing to manufacture excuses to fire the first missile? If they are warmongers, then they are your enemy, even when trying to kill people you don’t necessarily like at the moment.

8) They offer promises they never intend to keep.

If a politician promises to end an illegal war and pull American troops from the battlefield once elected to office, and then doesn’t, or pretends to pull troops out while maintaining permanent bases and shifting private Blackwater-style contractors into the field to take their place, then he is a liar. It’s that simple. If a central banker promises fiat printing and massive stimulus programs will unfreeze credit markets and generate an employment recovery within a couple of years, and the fiscal situation only becomes worse afterwards, he’s a liar. It’s that simple.

Let’s bring them to justice

If a person in a position of power makes promises continuously that are impossible to fulfill, or that he obviously knows cannot be fulfilled, then he is buying time. But buying time for what? Well, usually, he is buying time so that he can consolidate more power, and he is hoping the public will be duped into giving that power to him in exchange for false hopes and empty dreams. Any corporate or governmental entity that is unable to attain the public’s consent without conning them is an enemy to the welfare of the public, and should be removed like a throbbing tick.

9) You wouldn’t leave your children alone with them.

Ask yourself, could you leave your children in a room with this person or group and feel safe about it? If the answer is an honest “No,” then how could you leave your country and your children’s future in their hands instead...?

In the coming years, the American people will face numerous threats; some real, some imagined in the sterile conference rooms of black-hearted think tanks. But, the most terrifying threat to our cultural roots of free thought, expression and prosperity is wielded by a very particular and exclusive group of thin-blooded ego-maniacs. Identifying them is not difficult. Hiding the true nature is nearly impossible for a person or institution whose narcissism is so pronounced. They adore their own insanity and wish to share it with the world. If they fit the profile listed above, it is a guarantee that they will wreak havoc upon your life, directly or indirectly, someday. Know who they are, so that when the time comes you will know whom to blame and bring to justice.

FBI organizes almost all terror plots in the U. S.

THE FEDERAL BUREAU of Investigation employs upwards of 15,000 undercover agents today, ten times what they had on the roster back in 1975.

If you think that’s a few spies too many – spies earning as much as $100,000 per assignment – one doesn’t have to go too deep into their track record to see their accomplishments. Those agents are responsible for an overwhelming lot of terrorist stings that have stopped major domestic catastrophes in the vein of 9/11 from happening on American soil.

Another thing those agents are responsible for, however, is plotting those very schemes.

The FBI has in recent years used trained informants not just to snitch on suspected terrorists, but to set them up from the get-go. A recent report put together by Mother Jones and the Investigative Reporting Program at the University of California-Berkley analyses some striking statistics about the role of FBI informants in terrorism cases that the Bureau has targeted in the decade since the September 11 attacks.

The report reveals that the FBI regularly infiltrates communities where they suspect terrorist-minded individuals to be engaging with others. Regardless of their intentions, agents are sent in to converse within the community, find suspects that could potentially carry out “lone wolf” attacks and then, more or less, encourage them to do so. By providing weaponry, funds and a plan, FBI-directed agents will encourage otherwise-unwilling participants to plot out terrorist attacks, only to bust them before any events fully materialize.

Additionally, one former high-level FBI official speaking to Mother Jones says that, for every informant officially employed by the bureau, up to three unofficial agents are working undercover.

The FBI has used those informants to set up and thus shut down several of the more high profile, would-be attacks in recent years. The report reveals that the Washington DC Metro bombing plot, the New York City subway plot, the attempt to blow up Chicago’s Sears Tower and dozens more were all orchestrated by FBI agents. In fact, reads the report, only three of the more well-known terror plots of the last decade weren’t orchestrated by FBI-involved agents.

The report reveals that in many of the stings, important meetings between informants and the unknowing participants are left purposely unrecorded, as to avoid any entrapment charges that could cause the case to be dismissed. Perhaps the most high-profile of the FBI-proposed plots was the case of the Newburgh Four. Around an hour outside of New York City, an informant infiltrated a Muslim community and engaged four local men to carry out a series of attacks.

Those men may have never actually carried out an attack, but once the informant offered them a plot and a pair of missiles, they agreed. Defense attorneys cried “entrapment,” but the men still were sentenced to 25 years apiece.

Trading freedom for “safety”

“The problem with the cases we’re talking about is that defendants would not have done anything if not kicked in the ass by government agents,” Martin Stolar tells Mother Jones. Stolar represented the suspect involved in a New York City bombing plot that was set up by FBI agents. “They’re creating crimes to solve crimes so they can claim a victory in the war on terror.” For their part, the FBI says this method is a plan for “preemption,” “prevention” and “disruption.”

The report also reveals that, of the 500-plus prosecutions of terrorism-related cases they analyzed, nearly half of them involved the use of informants, many of whom worked for the FBI in exchange for money or to work off criminal charges. Of the 158 prosecutions carried out, 49 defendants participated in plots that agent provocateurs arranged on behalf of the FBI.

Bureau of Instigation

Experts note that the chance of winning a terrorism-related trial, entrapment or not, is near impossible. “The plots people are accused of being part of – attacking subway systems or trying to bomb a building – are so frightening that they can overwhelm a jury,” David Cole, a Georgetown University law professor, tells Mother Jones. Since 9/11, almost two-thirds of the cases linked to terrorism have ended with guilty pleas. “They don’t say, ‘I’ve been entrapped,’ or, ‘I was immature,’” a retired FBI official remarks.

All of this and those guilty pleas often stem from just being in the right place at the wrong time. Farhana Khera of the group Muslim Advocate notes that agents go into mosques on “fishing expeditions” just to see where they can get interest in the community. “The FBI is now telling agents they can go into houses of worship without probable cause,” says Khera. “That raises serious constitutional issues.”

From the set-up to the big finish, the whole sting operation is ripe with constitutional issues such as that. A decade since 9/11, however, the FBI is reaching through whatever means it can pull together to keep terrorists – or whom they think could someday become one – from ever hurting America.

Wakey wakey Dr. Hagee

By Nancy Hitt

hunleyhitt@earthlink.net

Did John Hagee sleep through his seminary courses in comparative religions?

It would appear to me that a study of the three monotheistic religions would be a “hot topic” in any education of a future church leader. This knowledge of other religions could be used as a weapon against those other faiths. We frequently see Dr. Hagee use his TV pulpit to attack the followers of Islam while praising the gifts of Judaism, but what does he really know about these two religions? Is he hiding facts from the faithful?

Omnipresent

Judaism, Christianity and Islam are each based upon a belief in one creator of the universe. Adherents to Judaism refer to Yahweh, Christians say God and Moslems revere Allah. Judaism is the earliest monotheistic faith of these three. Jewish ideas originated from contact with the pagan cults of Egypt. A multitude of Rabbis have recorded hundreds of dogmas which are found within the Talmud and Torah. Christians incorporated some of their bloody history-telling into the Old Testament. I understand that Jews do not accept the Old Testament, and denounce the Bible. Those who were called by the Prophet Mohammed to follow Islam believe in the words found within the Qur’an (Koran).

On a shelf in my bookcase is a set of six volumes, each of which is about a different religion. I chose to read the book entitled, Islam, edited by John A. Williams. The author is a retired Professor of Humanities and Religion at the College of William and Mary. He taught Islamic Studies at the McGill University Institute of Islamic Studies in Montreal and the American University in Cairo. He has written eight books on Islamic religion and civilization as well as many articles.

Let us see what Mr. Williams found out about those awful, terroristic “towelheads” who hate us because of our freedom bla bla bla.....

The very foundation of Islam is derived from Judaism and Christianity. The religion of the Moslems followed in the footsteps of these two monotheistic religions by hundreds of years. Mohammed, their prophet, gave birth to Islam in the Seventh Century A. D.

The prophets of those who believe in Islam, well known to Christians, are Noah, Abraham, Moses and Jesus. Mohammad is their prophet of signal importance, though he remains mostly unknown to Christians. Moslems revere Jesus Christ and his mother, Mary. While not adhering to the belief that Jesus was conceived through a union with the creator of the universe, they do consider Allah to be human in form.

The Moslem is encouraged to give aid to strangers and alms to the poor. He has a prescribed method for washing himself before entering into a mosque. Followers of Islam are admonished to refrain from drinking wine and gambling. Mohammed warned against abusing animals. Moslems face serious repercussions if convicted of crimes or adultery. As with Mormons, the Islamic faith allows for multiple wives.

There have been schisms in the Catholic and Orthodox Churches. Today we have multiple Protestant denominations. Other leaders also came to different conclusions about their faith, which led to an array of sects within the Moslem world.

Quoting from Page 131, this Moslem doctrine would most likely never appear within Jewish religious tracts: “There is no impropriety in visiting a Jew or Christian in their illness... the Law does not prohibit us from thus consoling them.”

Closer view of the Moslems

In 1967, I traveled alone to Morocco and spent three months in that Arab land. I knew nothing of their religion, but was soon aware of their hospitality to foreigners. I often walked the streets of Tangier and saw the beggars, the colorful bazaars and young ragamuffins touting their goods for sale. I witnessed the good, the bad, the ugly, and left Morocco with two lasting assumptions regarding Arabs. They are fatalistic in believing that everything is in God’s hands, and most of the population continues to live very much as their distant forefathers did – as potters, weavers and herders of goats.

Never having visited Israel, I have read a few samplings of translations from their religious edicts which show that, instead of demonstrating kindness and hospitality to strangers, Jews believe their creator deemed them “the chosen ones.” In some religious tracts, Rabbis encourage Jews to spit upon Christians – and spit whenever they walk past a Christian Church. Jewish writers have decreed that it is quite acceptable to deceive gentiles, lie to them, break contracts with and even murder them.

Time for anti-schematism

Here in 2012 we find the media totally ignoring that apartheid practiced by the Israelis, while the native Arab citizens of Palestine get separated by walls and laws. It is rather ironic that Arabs are mostly Semitic, whereas the Jews of today, mainly descendants of Khazar converts invading from central Europe, probably retain little if any Semitic blood.

I wonder if heavyweight Hagee will ever have the gumption to preach what he must have been taught about the hateful practices of Judaism. Will he ever inform his Christian Zionist followers that Jews are told gentiles are just “goyim,” a word meaning cattle?

I double-dare Dr. Hagee and his ilk to preach from the pulpits how their beloved Chosenites believe that Jesus Christ was illegitimate and Mary a harlot!

Honestly folks, wouldn’t you prefer to hear how Islam considers Jesus Christ one of its prophets rather than that Judaism denounces the same as a bastard son of a whore?

Change

This hardbound book, entitled Islam, contains 256 pages and was published in 1962 by George Braziller, Inc. of New York. Used copies can be found online at www.abebooks.com.

Maybe it’s time for all of us to brush up on comparative religions before we go taking pompous, overly-plump preachers like Dr. Hagee and their slanted versions of Judaism seriously.

Get ready because it’s coming

By Gregory Kay
gregmkay@yahoo.com

I know most readers of The First Freedom are (to put it mildly and appropriately for mixed company) somewhat less than thrilled about both the Democratic and the Republican presidential offerings this election. By the time you read this, the election will either be over or close to it, and, within a few days from then at most, one or the other of these two is going to be selected.

I don’t like it either, but facts are facts, and we need to start getting our heads around them so we can be prepared to deal with it. And then, boys, there’s going to be fire on the mountain.

You see, regardless of whether Obama or Romney takes the Oval Office, the odds are better than 50-50 we’re going to have a serious domestic insurgency – an armed conflict – before the next term is out, and probably well before. I’d bet money on it.

I know people say it won’t matter which of them gets in, and I don’t believe it will; this next revolution will start either way. The only difference is that whichever one gets elected will define the nature of the coming conflict.

The Black magic show

Let’s start with Obama. If he’s reelected, that fact alone will have the “right wing” (both real and “neo-conservative”) ready to explode, particularly since Obama would declare he has a mandate, and, as he stated to Russian Premier Vladimir Putin when thinking the mike was off, he’ll have much “more freedom of action once the election is over” – to establish his neo-communist agenda by a flurry of executive orders and regulatory agency directives that would never pass congressional muster. And, as the Senate will likely remain under tight Democratic control, I can guarantee that none of it gets overridden. Look for higher taxes, more regulations, an expansion of the welfare rolls, a larger blanket amnesty and guest worker program along with an expedited path to citizenship for third worlders (still more of them being lured in as refugees) in order to insure a permanent Democratic majority for future elections, major gun and/or ammunition control and, without a doubt, more controls on travel, religion and speech.

Add to that a meteoric rise in Black crime due to the Negroes being protected by one of their own and you’ve got an open powder keg that needs only a spark to set off and start the Third Revolution – more than a geo-political conflict – a full-blown race war.

The greatest show on earth

It’s not going to help calm things down when people realize this election itself is a conspiracy theory (probably a conspiracy fact) in the making. Not only did you have the usual Democratic machine duplicity. James O’Keefe is undercover again, and has recorded Obama campaign staffers telling people it’s okay to register and vote in multiple States, helping them register for it. Then there’s the stupidity of a federal court declaring voter ID requirements constitutional, “but in future elections, not this one,” thus assuring massive voter fraud. That issue will likely end up being dwarfed by the counting process itself, which doesn’t even take place in the United States, but Spain, where Obama has always proven more popular than here. A CNN article had it: “When the Spanish online voting company SCYTL bought the largest vote processing corporation in the United States, it also acquired the means of manufacturing the outcome of the 2012 election. For SOE, the Tampa based corporation purchased by SCYTL in January, supplies the election software which records, counts and reports the votes of Americans in 26 States – 900 total jurisdictions across the nation. The fact that the same company will have first count on all votes made in 14 U. S. States and hundreds of jurisdictions in 12 others, and the stage is set for election fraud on a scale unimaginable just a decade ago.”

Have another slice?

Just to add some icing on that whole, disgusting cake, SCYTL is owned by a man named Peré Valles, reportedly a major Obama contributor, and one of the main

Europe won the Nobel Peace Prize last month, but it comes at a time when the threat of the European Union splitting apart is considerable. Great Britain is turning away from the EU and the German government is allowing it to do so. In the future, Chancellor Merkel wants to forge ahead with projects London opposes.

David Cameron knows that if there is one thing that pleases his fellow party members, it’s a rant against Brussels. At last month’s Tory conference in Birmingham, it didn’t take long before the British prime minister had his audience in high spirits.

Cameron reminded his listeners of the negotiations with other European Union member States over the fiscal pact last December. “There were 25 people in the room, urging me to sign,” he said proudly. “And still I said no.” The reaction was predictable, with the delegates applauding enthusiastically.

On Monday, October 8, the second stage of the Nord Stream pipeline was launched into operation. The total capacity of the pipeline is expected to grow to 55 billion cubic meters a year.

There was only one line of Nord Stream operating shareholders in the company is rumored to be extreme leftist Obama-backer George Soros. This bizarre situation and clear conflict of interest is certain to make an Obama victory totally illegitimate in the eyes of many voters.

Different horse, same stable

Now we look at Romney. What if he’s elected? In that case, the revolt will come from the left; they’ll insist their “man” was cheated, literally go ape (no pun intended) as massive riots sweep across the country complete with arson, looting, rape and the murders that usually follow anytime they don’t get their way; only this time it will be the L. A. Riots on a continental scale.

Should it happen between Romney’s election in November and Obama’s exit in January, the incumbent regime will handle that rampage with kid gloves, leaving you to your own defenses while loading the incoming Republican administration with massive debt from the resultant destruction. If the violence holds off until Romney is in there, I predict he will seek to establish his credibility by slamming down hard on them, certainly with Marines and National Guard units, also possibly localized martial law and regular Army troops.

He would have no other real choice in such a situation, but the leftists will play it up as “more racist slaughter.” After all, if they’re still griping about lawmen spraying rioting Blacks with firehoses back during the desegregation unrest, how do you think they’ll react when a few of their pets get bayoneted or shot?

The left will certainly start a revolt of their own, likely in the form of ’60s-style riots and terror attacks, quite possibly in alliance with radical Islamists out for blood due to Romney’s sycophantic devotion to Israel and his stated intention for increased political, economic and military aggression in their part of the world.

And then there’s...

The Romney scenario also leads us to a third possibility, grimmer than either of the above two. What if the Obama wing refuses to leave office? Using some issue either real or manufactured, such as a large terror attack or the unrest following that Republican victory, it is not at all outside the realm of possibility that Obama, using his recently-adopted presidential powers, could declare a state of emergency and martial law, suspending not only the U. S. Constitution but the changeover. In fact, if it’s decided that his platoon must not lose, they could even do all of this before the election.

Possibilities

Unconstitutional? Sure, and the courts might overturn it; but, as Andrew Jackson derisively said when ignoring the Supreme Court’s order to stop stealing the Cherokee lands and continued with their removal, “Let the Court try to enforce their ruling.” After all, the occupant of the Oval Office is Commander in Chief of the entire military as well as virtually every federal agency, including the Department of Justice and Homeland Security. If push comes to shove, what do the Courts and Congress have, other than a small number of armed citizens who will actually recognize their moral obligation to resist with force?

Tied hands

Even if Congress chose to do something about it physically – which they could; remember what happened to the Roman Emperor Julius Caesar? – they’re legally forbidden by a patently unconstitutional law this pack of idiots signed themselves, preventing them from reviewing such a presidential declaration for six months! Picture America with Obama completely unchecked, the all-powerful dictator for half a year; it would look like Gaza or the West Bank!

In the end, it’s not who votes that counts, but who counts the votes. And no matter which wing “wins,” we have the very real potential for major trouble from a number of different sources. The best advice I can give is, store plenty of ammunition; keep your loaded guns cleaned; have the will and skill to use them.

God be with us all.

Britain losing allegiance to the EU

Great Britain is turning away from the EU and the German government is allowing it to do so. In the future, Chancellor Merkel wants to forge ahead with projects London opposes.

David Cameron knows that if there is one thing that pleases his fellow party members, it’s a rant against Brussels. At last month’s Tory conference in Birmingham, it didn’t take long before the British prime minister had his audience in high spirits.

Cameron reminded his listeners of the negotiations with other European Union member States over the fiscal pact last December. “There were 25 people in the room, urging me to sign,” he said proudly. “And still I said no.” The reaction was predictable, with the delegates applauding enthusiastically.

On Monday, October 8, the second stage of the Nord Stream pipeline was launched into operation. The total capacity of the pipeline is expected to grow to 55 billion cubic meters a year.

The Tories had understood the message Cameron was trying to convey, namely that the government in London no longer has much in common with Europe. The British want to have no part of further integration on the continent, and they also want to withdraw from many areas of policy in which they have been involved in Brussels so far.

Russia ties Europe to its natural gas lines before this. Commercial gas supplies on the line of similar capacity began eleven months ago, on November 8, 2011, RBC reports. As President Vladimir Putin said during a teleconference last month, Nord Stream is capable of meeting Europe’s growing demand for energy resources.

“The gas will be supplied directly along the shortest route, connecting Russia’s largest gas deposits with European markets without transit risks, stable and smoothly. We guarantee this,” said Putin.

It is worthy of note that a recent study confirmed that the construction of one or two additional lines of the Nord Stream was possible technically, environmentally and financially.

Some CIA chiefs face arrest over horrific evidence of bloody “video game” sorties by drone pilots.

By David Rose
dailymail.co.uk

October 21 – The Mail on Sunday today reveals shocking new evidence of the full horrific impact of U. S. drone attacks in Pakistan.

A damning dossier assembled from exhaustive research into the strikes’ targets sets out in heartbreaking detail the deaths of teachers, students and Pakistani policemen. It also describes how bereaved relatives are forced to gather their loved ones’ dismembered body parts in the aftermath of strikes.

The dossier has been assembled by human rights lawyer Shahzad Akbar, who works for Pakistan’s Foundation for Fundamental Rights and the British human rights charity Reprieve.

Filed in two separate court cases, it is set to trigger a formal murder investigation by police into the roles of two U. S. officials said to have ordered the strikes. They are Jonathan Banks, former head of the Central Intelligence Agency’s Islamabad station, and John A. Rizzo, the CIA’s former chief lawyer. Mr. Akbar and his staff have already gathered further testimony which has yet to be filed.

How the attacks unfolded...

“We have statements from a further 82 victims’ families relating to more than 30 drone strikes,” he said. “This is their only hope of justice.”

In the first case, which has already been heard by a court in Islamabad, judgment is expected imminently. If the judge grants Mr. Akbar’s petition, an international arrest warrant will be issued via Interpol against the two Americans.

The second case is being heard in the city of Peshawar. In it, Mr. Akbar and the families of drone victims who are civilians are seeking a ruling that further strikes in Pakistani airspace should be viewed as “acts of war.”

They argue that means the Pakistan Air Force should try to shoot down the drones and that the government should sever its diplomatic relations with the U. S. and launch murder inquiries against those responsible.

According to a report last month by academics at Stanford and New York universities, between 2,562 and 3,325 people have been killed since the strikes in Pakistan began in 2004.

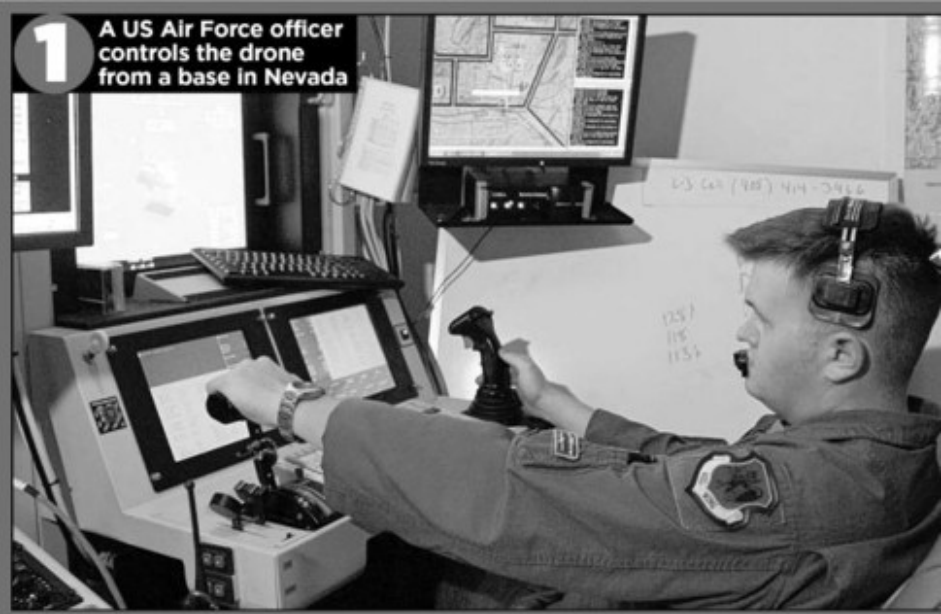

The report said of those, up to 881 were civilians, including 176 children. Only 41 people who had died had been confirmed as “high-value” terrorist targets.

Getting at the truth is difficult because the tribal regions along the frontier are closed to journalists. U. S. security officials continue to claim that almost all those killed are militants who use bases in Pakistan to launch attacks on Western forces across the border in Afghanistan.

In his only acknowledgement that the U. S. has ever launched such attacks at all, President Barack Obama said in January: “This is a targeted, focused effort at people who are on a list of active terrorists, who are trying to go in and harm Americans.”

But behind the dry legal papers seen by The Mail on Sunday lies the most detailed investigation into individual strikes that has yet been carried out. It suggests that the U. S. President was mistaken.

The plaintiff in the Islamabad case is Karim Khan, 45, a journalist and translator with two masters’ degrees, whose family comes from the village of Machi Khel in the tribal region of North Waziristan.

His eldest son, Zahirullah, 18, and his brother, Asif Iqbal, 35, were killed by a Hellfire missile fired from a Predator drone that struck the family’s guest dining room at about 9:30 PM on New Year’s Eve, 2009.

Asif had changed his surname because he loved to recite Iqbal, Pakistan’s national poet, and Mr. Khan said: “We are an educated family. My uncle is a hospital doctor in Islamabad, and we all work in professions such as teaching.

“We have never had anything to do with militants or terrorists, and for that reason I always assumed we would be safe.”

Mr Khan said: “Zahirullah, who had been studying in Islamabad, had returned to the village to work his way through college, taking a part-time job as a school caretaker.

“He was a quiet boy and studious – always in the top group of his class.” Zahirullah also liked football, cricket and hunting partridges.

Asif, he added, was an English teacher and had spent several years taking further courses to improve his qualifications while already in work.

Mr. Khan said: “He was my kid brother. We used to have a laugh, tell jokes.” His first child was less than a year old when Asif was killed.

Included in the legal dossier are documents that corroborate Asif and Zahirulla’s educational and employment records, as well as their death certificates. Killed alongside them was Khaliq Dad, a stonemason who was staying with the family while he worked on a local mosque.

Mr. Khan, who had been working for a TV station in Islamabad, said he was given the news of their deaths in a 2 AM phone call from a cousin.

“I called a friend who had a car and we started driving through the night to get back to the village,” he said. “It was a terrible journey. I was shocked, grieving, angry, like anyone who had lost their loved ones.”

He got home soon after dawn and describes his return “like entering a village of the dead – it was so quiet. There was a crowd gathered outside the compound but nowhere for them to sit as the guest rooms had been destroyed.”

Zahirullah, Mr. Khan discovered, had been killed instantly, but despite his horrific injuries, Asif had survived long enough to be taken to a nearby hospital. However, he died during the night.

“We always bury people quickly in our culture. The funeral was at three o’clock that afternoon, and more than 1,000 people came,” Mr. Khan said. “Zahirullah had a wound on the side of his face and his body was crushed and charred. I am told the people who push the buttons to fire the missiles call these strikes ‘bug-splats.’

“It is beyond my imagination how they can lack all mercy and compassion, and carry on doing this for years. They are not human beings.”

Mr. Khan found Mr. Akbar through a friend who had attended lectures he gave at an Islamabad university. In 2010, he filed a criminal complaint – known as a first information report – to police naming Mr. Banks. However, they took no action, therefore triggering the lawsuit – a judicial review of that failure to act.

If the judge finds in favor of Mr. Khan, his decision cannot be appealed, thus making the full criminal inquiry and Interpol warrants inevitable.

According to the legal claim, someone from the Pakistan CIA network led by Mr. Banks – who left Pakistan in 2010 – targeted the Khan family and guided the Hellfire missile by throwing a GPS homing device into their compound.

A senior CIA officer said: “We do not discuss active operations or allegations against specific individuals.”

Mr. Rizzo is named because of an interview he gave to a U. S. reporter after he retired as CIA General Counsel last year. In it, he boasted that he had personally authorized every drone strike in which America’s enemies were “hunted down and blown to bits.”

He added: “It’s basically a hit-list... The Predator is the weapon of choice, but it could also be someone putting a bullet in your head.”

Last night a senior Pakistani security official, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said that Pakistan’s own intelligence agency, the ISI, has always been excluded by the CIA from choosing drone targets.

“They insist on using their own networks,

The U. S. Postal Service has defaulted on its pension plan payment to the United States yet again in the amount of 5.6 billion dollars. That makes at least twice, and their plan is to wait for the Congress to bail them out; but Congress is in recess until after the election.

I have a suggestion: Eliminate “free” home delivery. The price of a stamp does not cover it. “Free” home delivery is a privilege/benefit granted us by Grover Cleveland with an executive order during his presidency in 1896. The first credible reason for the United States to grant such a benefit is to learn where we all live. The second possibility, it make us “voluntarily” concede jurisdiction over ourselves to the United States including all its laws and regulations when accepting said benefit. For that benefit, we must volunteer our home address. On top of that, the USPS sells our addresses to telemarketers and anyone else who will pay for them.

The USPS will not allow us to post or receive mail long-term at general delivery, even though there is no law or regulation saying that we can t get our mail at general delivery while showing no physical address on the application.

Limiting it station to station

In getting rid of “free” home delivery, the USPS would save around 2.5 billion dollars every quarter by my estimation, and become solvent. John Hill, assistant director of some sort in the Charlotte office of the USPS, told me it costs $50.00 per year for each customer’s “free” home delivery. But then he said it’s cheaper for the USPS to provide “free” home delivery than hand us our mail over the counter. Go figure.

Let us conservatively estimate at least 200 million commercial and residential delivery addresses served. That’s around $10 billion dollars a year. Or, they can charge us for home delivery the same as FedEx and UPS do. Most would gladly pay $50.00 for home delivery. An added benefit is that we can get our privacy and security back by opting out and picking up our mail directly at the USPS store.

Change

What do you think? Maybe someone should put this up on a blog. I don’t know how. I suggested it to the USPS, but no joy. Just think of all the mail carriers who would be earlier retired, or just fired, and paying their own informants. Dollars can be very persuasive,” said the official.

He claimed the intelligence behind drone strikes was often seriously flawed. As a result, “they are causing the loss of innocent lives.”

But even this, he added, was not as objectionable as the so-called “signature strikes” – when a drone operator, sitting at a computer screen thousands of miles away in Nevada, selects a target because he thinks the drone camera has spotted something suspicious.

He said: “It could be a vehicle containing armed men heading towards the border, and the operator thinks, ‘Let’s get them before they get there,’ without any idea of who they are.

“It could also just be people sitting together. In the frontier region, every male is armed but it doesn’t mean they are militants.”

One such signature strike killed more than 40 people in Datta Khel in North Waziristan on March 17 last year. The victims, Mr. Akbar’s dossier makes clear, had gathered for a jirga – a tribal meeting – in order to discuss a dispute between two clans over the division of royalties from a chromite mine.

Some of the most horrifying testimony comes from Khalil Khan, the son of Malik how many “more government” votes lost in the process.

I personally despise the system because it will not allow us privacy when receiving mail. In my case, the USPS won’t deliver my mail unless I “volunteer” for the “free” home delivery service. They adamantly refuse to hand me my mail if it’s addressed to “General Post” or “General Delivery.”

Your right to sell your stuff

Jennifer Waters’ Consumer Confidential says:

Tucked into the U. S. Supreme Court’s busy agenda this fall is a little-known case that could upend your ability to resell everything from your grandmother’s antique furniture to your iPhone 4.

The short version: In the U. S., courts have long recognized that once we buy something – whether it’s a Van Gogh painting or a Toyota – it’s ours and we can re-sell it.

Not so in some other parts of the world – or at least not without paying obeisance to the original maker. And now one more attempt is being made to impose other people’s laws on us. So, potentially, if your car has Japanese parts or you bought that dress on a trip to Italy, it might become illegal to re-sell it.

If Ms. Waters is right, and the Nazgul do their frequently statist thing, we could technically lose The All-American Garage Sale. Or eBay. Or Craigslist. Or ... perhaps even gun trading?

Sounds alarming.

Now let’s stop a second. And give a hearty, insouciant Freedom Outlaw laugh (once again) to the arrogance of Our Rulers.

Then let’s get some practicalities out of the way before we continue slapping our thighs in contemptuous, Outlaw glee.

The Supremes just might choose to find against statism this time. If the Nazgul rule bad, Congress could afterward choose to restore Our Right to eBay via legislation.

But no matter what they do, if it hinders us from selling our stuff it’s just chaos-causing nonsense.

Remember the diktat a couple of years back that was going to prevent anybody

Haji Babat, a tribal leader and police officer. “My father was not a terrorist. He was not an enemy of the United States,” Khalil’s legal statement says. “He was a hard-working and upstanding citizen, the type of person others looked up to and aspired to be like.”

Khalil, 32, last saw his father three hours before his death, when he left for a business meeting in a nearby town. Informed his father had been killed, Khalil hurried to the scene.

“What I saw when I got off the bus at Datta Khel was horrible,” he said. “I immediately saw flames and women and children were saying there had been a drone strike. The fires spread after the strike.

“I went to the location where the jirga had been held. The situation was really very bad. There were still people lying around injured.

“The tribal elders who had been killed could not be identified because there were body parts strewn about. The smell was awful. I just collected the pieces that I believed belonged to my father and placed them in a small coffin.”

Khalil said that as a police officer, his father had earned a good salary, on which he supported his family. Khalil has considered returning to the Gulf, where he worked for 14 years, but “because of the frequency of government, was granted some autonomy in or about 1971 so that it could operate more like a private business, because the U. S. Post Office was losing money hand over fist. Now, it’s “too big to fail.”

Get on to what works

I say close it down and let the private sector pick up the slack. All we authorized the Congress to do via the Constitution in from selling used kids clothes, toys, blankies, etc.? (Might contain lead, you know.) It stunk. It also got howled down by an angry public. Oh, sorry; I mean, the ruling got “clarified.”

And even if it hadn’t, do you believe for one minute that millions of mommies and daddies around the country would have said, “Oh, well, then. I guess we’d better landfill baby’s old stuff in lead-lined containers to keep the world safe from lead that might be in it. We don’t dare defy the Might of the Federal Government to make a buck off it”? Hahahahaha! Not a chance.

No matter what the Supreme Court says, no matter what Congress does or doesn’t do, this is just the sort of issue that – hey, ain’t it grand! – produces more Outlaws. And more ordinary, everyday, going-about-our-business contempt for Authoritah.

Oh, I’m sure if the Supremes rule that we have to pay the copyright and patent holders to resell our stuff, some unpleasant mainstream accommodations will be made. Maybe there will be licenses required for resale with money going into a fund to pay drones I am concerned to leave my family.”

He added that schools in the area were empty because “parents are afraid their children will be hit by a missile.”

In another statement – one of 13 taken by Mr. Akbar concerning the Datta Khel strike – driver Ahmed Jan, 52, describes the moment the missile hit: “We were in the middle of our discussion and I was thrown about 24 feet from where I was sitting. I was knocked unconscious. When I awoke, I saw many individuals who were injured or dead.

“I have lost the use of one of my feet and have a rod inserted because of the injuries. It is so painful for me to walk. There are scars on my face because I had to have an operation on my nose when it would not stop bleeding.”

Mr. Jan says he has spent £3,600 on medical treatment but “I have never been offered compensation of any kind... I do not know why this jirga was targeted. I am a malik [elder] of my tribe and therefore a government servant. We were not doing anything wrong or illegal.”

Another survivor was Mohammed Noor, 27, a stonemason, who attended the jirga with his uncle and his cousin, both of whom were killed. “The parts of their bodies had to be collected first. These parts were all we had of them,” he said.

that regard was to “establish Post Offices and Post Roads.” We said nothing about “free” delivery. Therefore, “free” delivery is unconstitutional.

So what’s new? Nearly everything the United States does these days is equally unconstitutional. Apathy is the problem but who cares?

off the original manufacturers. Rembrandt’s wife’s third cousin 10 generations removed and Whistler’s mother’s aunt’s brother’s great-great-grandson will sue for a “fair share” when somebody tries to sell a masterpiece. Companies or individuals with big financial interests will make life miserable for big institutions that facilitate that resale of goods – and make things more expensive for those who try to resell in such aboveboard ways. An “eBay tax,” anyone?

Last laugh goes to the Truth

But, as for the rest of us, we’ll just slip further between the cracks, further underground, further into having a Good Bad Attitude. Nobody will stop doing what he does. If some damn law or ruling makes it difficult or expensive, we’ll just do it in a different way. And millions more will realize that the gummint, despite a lifetime of propaganda, doesn’t really exist to help them... and isn’t really powerful enough to hinder them, either.

And so power crumbles...

“We can handle the truth, some of us anyway”

America is in its 11th year of war in Afghanistan and losing. Everyone there hates us. We haven’t won a single “heart” or “mind.” We have succeeded in building an empire of opium and heroin on a scale never before imagined.

Millions at home, tens of millions in Russia, Europe and around the world have been destroyed by the flood of narcotics distributed with deadly efficiency by a combination of rogue military and intelligence operations and the contracting firms we paid to protect us.

Weep and then pray

American corruption, incompetence and brutality have recruited hundreds of thousands into a war against the United States who could otherwise have been our allies. This is the simple truth of it.

The entire premise for Afghanistan was a lie. Not long ago, Ron Paul exposed even the first Gulf War as a lie. Saddam’s invasion of Kuwait was authorized and supported by the United States. This is one of the uncelebrated Wikileaks accomplishments.

Everybody knows, and I do so love saying this, that there were no WMDs in Iraq, that the whole thing was set up by Israel. 5,000 Americans died uselessly. Let’s face it, “uselessly” is the right term, no way about it. We can handle the truth.

- Handle this:
- 9/11 was pure “false flag,” staged by Israel with help from the Pentagon, CIA and White House “friends.”
 - There were no 9/11 hijackers, no “box cutters,” no airplane drama, no passengers storming the cockpit, no phone calls; it was all made up.
 - No plane hit the Pentagon; it was a missile.
 - Two airplanes didn’t knock down the three WTC towers.
 - Osama bin Laden worked for the CIA and died eleven years ago.

Israelis “using Kurds to build power base”

Is it all down the memory hole, or can we learn something from this article which first appeared in the British Guardian on Sunday, June 20, 2004? Looks like Russia’s “Great Game” has migrated with her “ex-pats” today into Palestine.

By Gary Younge in New York
guardian.co.uk

Israeli military and intelligence operatives are active in Kurdish areas of Iran, Syria and Iraq, providing training for commando units and running covert operations that could further destabilize the entire region, according to a report in the New Yorker magazine.

Secondhand facts

The article was written by Seymour Hersh, the Pulitzer Prize-winning reporter who exposed the abuse scandal in Abu Ghraib. It is sourced primarily to unnamed former and current intelligence officials in Israel, the United States and Turkey.

Israel’s aims, according to Hersh, are to build up the Kurdish military strength in order to offset the strength of the Shia militias and to create a base in Iran from which they can spy on Iran’s suspected nuclear-making facilities.

“Israel has always supported the Kurds in a Machiavellian way – a balance against Saddam,” one former Israeli intelligence officer told the New Yorker. “It’s Realpolitik. By aligning with the Kurds Israel gains eyes and ears in Iran, Iraq and Syria. The critical question is, ‘What will the behavior of Iran be if there is an independent Kurdistan with close ties to Israel? Iran does not want an Israeli land-based aircraft carrier on its border.’”

By supporting Kurdish separatists, Israel also risks alienating its Turkish ally and undermining attempts to create a stable Iraq. “If you end up with a divided Iraq it will bring more blood, tears and pain to the Middle East and you will be blamed,” a senior Turkish official told Mr. Hersh.

Intel Brief, an intelligence newsletter produced by former CIA chiefs, noted early this month that the Israeli actions are placing increasing stress on their relationship with Turkey, which was already strained over the war. “The Turks are increasingly concerned by the expanding Israeli presence in Kurdistan and alleged encouragement of Kurdish ambitions to create an independent State.”

According to Mr. Hersh, Israel decided to step up its role in Kurdistan last summer after it was clear that the United States incursion into Iraq was failing, principally because it feared the chaos would strengthen Iran. The Israelis are particularly concerned that Iran may be developing a nuclear capability.

Iran said on Saturday it would reconsider its suspension of some uranium enrichment activities after the International Atomic Energy Agency issued a resolution deploring Iran’s limited cooperation with the agency.

In the autumn the former Israeli prime minister Ehud Barak told the U. S. vice president, Dick Cheney, that America had lost in Iraq. Israel “had learned that there’s no way to win an occupation,” he told Mr. Cheney, and the only issue was “choosing the size of your humiliation.”

From July last year, argues Mr. Hersh, the Israeli government started what one

Israel trains assassination squads in Iraq

A gem of belated enlightenment, here’s one from December 8, 2003:

By Julian Borger in Washington
guardian.co.uk

Israeli advisers are helping train U. S. special forces in aggressive counter-insurgency operations in Iraq, including the use of assassination squads against guerrilla leaders, U. S. intelligence and military sources said yesterday.

The Israeli Defense Force (IDF) has sent urban warfare specialists to Fort Bragg in North Carolina, the home of U. S. special forces, and according to two sources, Israeli military “consultants” have also visited Iraq.

U. S. forces in Iraq’s Sunni triangle have already begun to use tactics that echo Israeli operations in the occupied territories, sealing off centers of resistance with razor wire and razing buildings from where attacks have been launched against U. S. troops.

But the secret war in Iraq is about to get much tougher, in the hope of suppressing the Ba’athist-led insurgency ahead of next November’s presidential elections.

Murder, Inc.

U. S. special forces teams are already behind the lines inside Syria attempting to kill foreign jihadists before they cross the border, and a group focused on the “neutralization” of guerrilla leaders is being set up, according to sources familiar with the operations.

“This is basically an assassination program. That is what is being conceptualized here. This is a hunter-killer team,” said a former senior U. S. intelligence official, who added that he feared the new tactics and enhanced cooperation with Israel would only inflame a volatile situation in the ▪ Al Qaeda never existed until we invented it. It still doesn’t, not really, though millions of Muslims now wish it did so they could join.

There is so much “hard proof” of these things, you could convict “OJ” even with Alan Dershowitz defending him.

The “proof” of the cover story dissolved years ago, the phony investigation, the phony engineering study, all a sick joke, with the emphasis on “sick.” Anyone who accepts this bilk is simply too stupid to live.

Stalin style

We are preparing to put a “hijacker” on trial soon.

First of all, it isn’t really a trial at all, it’s some sort of military kangaroo court thing, quite illegal, quite unconstitutional, no surprise there.

Hey, it gets even better.

We aren’t even sure who we have. Not only did this guy have nothing to do with 9/11, according to intelligence sources, he probably is just some schmo we “bought” back during the Bush administration, some nameless victim like the dozens or even former Israeli intelligence official called “Plan B” in order to protect itself from the fallout of the chaos prompted by America’s failure ahead of June 30. If the June 30 transfer of sovereignty does not go well, “there is no fallback, nothing,” a former National Security Council member tells Hersh. “The neocons still think they can pull the rabbit out of the hat in Iraq,” a former intelligence official says. “What’s the plan? They say, ‘We don’t need it. Democracy is strong enough. We’ll work it out.’”

Managing the war

Israel has a longstanding relationship with the Kurds, whom they regard as one of the few non-Arab allies in the area.

Middle East.

“It is bonkers, insane. Here we are – we’re already being compared to Sharon in the Arab world, and we’ve just confirmed it by bringing in the Israelis and setting up assassination teams.”

“They are being trained by Israelis in Fort Bragg,” a well-informed intelligence source in Washington said.

“Some Israelis went to Iraq as well, not to do training, but for providing consultations.”

The consultants’ visit to Iraq was confirmed by another U. S. source who was in contact with American officials there.

The Pentagon did not return calls seeking comment, but a military planner, Brigadier General Michael Vane, mentioned the cooperation with Israel in a letter to Army magazine in July about the Iraq counter-insurgency campaign.

“We recently traveled to Israel to glean lessons learned from their counterterrorist operations in urban areas,” wrote General Vane, deputy chief of staff at the army’s training and doctrine command.

An Israeli official said the IDF regularly shared its experience in the West Bank and Gaza with the U. S. armed forces, but said he could not comment about cooperation in Iraq.

“When we do activities, the U. S. military attaches in Tel Aviv are interested. I assume hundreds, perhaps thousands, we kidnapped, tortured (and executed) “by mistake.”

Criminal administration

It was never a mistake. It was a “ploy.” Bush and Cheney needed “numbers” to sell the idea that they were winning the “GWOT.” (Global War on Terror) They gave these instructions:

- Get us “warm bodies,” for “suspects.” We don’t care who or why; we need “results.”
- Get us some “confessions,” the more outlandish the better...
- Go out and recruit “terrorists,” inside the U. S., Europe and around the world.

We want to be able to stage terror attacks on demand, based on election and news cycles or when we need a distraction.

This is the truth. This is what the facts support. This is what we need to admit and these are the crimes we need to redress, to our own people and people around the world.

We have become everything that we ourselves fear most. No more fairy tales, no more bedtime stories, no more lies!

The Iraqi Kurds, who played a key role in providing the United States with intelligence ahead of the war, have been angered by the United Nations resolution on Iraq earlier this month. The resolution did not affirm the interim constitution that granted them minority veto power in a permanent constitution and so could potentially leave them sidelined.

One Turkish official told Mr. Hersh that Kurdish independence would be calamitous for the region. “The lesson of Yugoslavia is that when you give one country independence, everybody will want it. Kirkuk will be the Sarajevo of Iraq. If something happens there, it will be impossible to contain the crisis.”

it’s the same as the British. That’s the way allies work. The special forces come to our people and say, do debrief on an operation we have done,” the official said.

“Does it affect Iraq? It’s not in our interest or the American interest or in anyone’s interest to go into that. It would just fit in with jihadist prejudices.”

Colonel Ralph Peters, a former army intelligence officer and a critic of Pentagon policy in Iraq, said yesterday there was nothing wrong with learning lessons wherever possible.

Hearts and minds into ashes

“When we turn to anyone for insights, it doesn’t mean we blindly accept it,” Colonel Peters said. “But I think what you’re seeing is a new realism. The American tendency is to try to win all the hearts and minds. In Iraq, there are just some hearts and minds you can’t win. Within the bounds of human rights, if you do make an example of certain villages it gets the attention of the others, and attacks have gone down in the area.”

The new counter-insurgency unit made up of elite troops being put together in the Pentagon is called Task Force 121, New Yorker magazine reported in yesterday’s edition.

One of the planners behind the offensive is a highly controversial figure, whose role is likely to inflame Muslim opinion: Lieutenant General William “Jerry” Boykin.

In October, there were calls for his resignation after he told a church congregation in Oregon that the U. S. was at war with Satan, who “wants to destroy us as a Christian army.”

“He’s been promoted a rank above his abilities,” [Peters] said. “Some generals are pretty good on the battlefield but are disastrous nearer the source of power.”

Mossad behind latest Beirut bombing

voltairenet.org
On October 19, an Israeli Mossad car bombing killed Lebanese internal security chief Brigadier General Wissam al-Hassan near Sassine Square in Beirut’s Christian district of Ashrafiya. Wissam al-Hassan, a close Sunni ally of President Michel Sulaiman, had recently unearthed an Israeli spy cell in Lebanon. The deadly blast killed eight people and injured another 78, mostly Lebanese Christians. American Jewish film-maker, political commentator and former personal secretary of Bertrand Russell, Ralph Schoeman, 77, told Iranian Press TV that the bombing has all the marks of Israeli Mossad. “As 1992 to today in the day bombing of Beirut the identical scenario, who benefits from attempting to divide Lebanon and spreading the turmoil, who benefits from destabilizing the government in Damascus, who wants to destabilize Beirut and subject Lebanon to civil war? The Zionist regime, the Mossad. It’s a classical Mossad operation,” he said. Lebanese Islamic Resistance Hizballah has condemned the bombing. The pro-

USrael opposition group March 14 led by Sa’ad Hariri called for the resignation of Lebanese prime minister Najib Mikati, which he offered – but Lebanese president Michel Sulaiman refused to accept it, saying that Mikati cannot be blamed for the security breach. Both Hariri and Mikati are Sunni billionaires and are not connected to Hizballah in any way. Hizballah is a part of the ruling March 8 Alliance.

Only game Mossadniks know

It seems the Zionist regime is playing its old covert operations to pit the Lebanese against each other. It carried out a similar car bombing when assassinating Rafik Hariri in February 2005 as part of an Israeli soft revolution before its invasion of Lebanon in the Summer of 2006.

114,000 U. S. contractors active in Afghan war

It’s difficult to say who deserves more to be put on trial: the roaches hiring young killer squads or those setting up all these regime changes.

presstv.ir
More private contractors are currently working for the U. S. military and other government agencies in Afghanistan than uniformed American military troops, reports indicate. As of July, nearly 114,000 contractors were working for the U. S. Defense Department in Afghanistan, compared to the 90,000 American troops in the country at the time, AFP reported on October 18, quoting “official statistics.” The figures about the presence of a high number of U. S. contractors working in Afghanistan emerged again after reports of a newly-released video showing American security contractors drunk and high on narcotics while on duty. The U. S.-based broadcaster ABC News, which released the footage and first reported on the incident, also cited a February 2011 report by a bipartisan commission set up to scrutinize the extraordinary use of contractors by the American military in Iraq and Afghanistan which concluded that the United States had wasted tens of billions of the nearly $177 billion that was spent on those contracts and grants since 2002.

Times reported earlier this year that in 2011 “at least 430 employees of American contractors were reported killed in Afghanistan,” compared to 418 American soldiers killed in the country in the same year, adding that the same trend was also true during the U. S. occupation of Iraq. Out of sight, out of mind

The report, however, emphasized that the U. S. military does not keep track of the casualties suffered by its contractors, noting that the country’s Department of Labor would hold the data for only American casualties that have been reported by U. S. contractors hiring them. It added that there is hardly any counting of casualties suffered by U. S. contract workers that are citizens of other nations. The Times report also stressed that for every contractor killed in countries invaded by the U. S., “many more are seriously wounded.” It cites the Labor Department’s statistics as reporting that in addition to the 430 contractors reported killed in Afghanistan in 2011, another 1,777 American contractors in the country got wounded.

Increasing numbers of U. S. defense contractors are employed in Afghanistan and Iraq.

Court martial of Gitmo inmates begin

presstv.ir
“I don’t think there’s any justice in this court,” said Khalid Shaikh Mohammed, the lead defendant who, through persistent publicity, has been accused by American military and government officials as the “mastermind” of the sophisticated terrorist attacks against the Twin Towers in New York and the Pentagon at Washington that killed nearly 3,000 people on September 11, 2001. Show time

Pre-trial hearings for Khalid Shaikh Mohammed and four other alleged al-Qaeda operatives opened October 15 with a ruling that the defendants cannot be forced to attend the court martial at the U. S. naval base and notorious prison camp at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, widely cited for torturing inmates. The other defendants are Ramzi Binalshibh, the alleged “manager of the cell” that carried out the attacks; Walid bin Attash, an alleged al-Qaeda training camp steward; and Mustafa Ahmed Hawsawi and Ammar al Baluchi, a.k.a. Ali Abdul Aziz Ali, alleged al-Qaeda financiers.

Stalin-like burlesque

The remarks by Mohammed about the military court’s illegitimacy, as well as his continued reservations against attending the court martial, was also invoked by attorneys of the other defendants while Chief Prosecutor Brig. Gen. Mark Martins insisted that under the military commission rules, the accused had no “right to refuse” presence in court sessions. “The government should not be forced to proceed against empty chairs,” Martins said, reflecting government’s demand that the court’s Judge James L. Pohl, an Army colonel, prohibit the suspects from staying in their prison cells to protest the military commission trial. Defense attorneys of the accused, however, argued that they should not be

Box-cutter breakout?

“I’ll be sure to leave a note when I go,” Baluchi jokingly responded to the judge. Monday was the opening day in a weeklong pre-trial hearing on 25 reported legal disputes in the only presumed legal trial emerging from the highly controversial 9/11 terrorist attacks with mounting, unanswered questions about the role of U. S. government elements in the attacks. The defendants are named in 87 charges that include conspiracy, murder, aircraft hijacking and terrorism. A trial has been tentatively scheduled for May 2013. Last May, the five defendants, who are faced with the death penalty if convicted, disrupted the military proceedings. One detainee had to be restrained, several refused to listen to Arabic translations on headphones and some outright ignored the judge. Two abruptly stood to pray. The military prosecution was relayed by video to reporters at Fort Meade, a major U. S. military and intelligence center in Maryland, near Washington DC.

Lost rights: right to trial by jury – revisited

aloe910@aol.com

The First Freedom has covered my ongoing case against certain Sheriff’s Department employees and more than a few employees of the State of North Carolina judiciary on grounds that they conspired to violate my rights to liberty and trial by jury. The reasons were simple: I was jailed for no good reason, and my jury was not properly sworn in accord with the State and federal Constitutions and NC statutory law. The court decided not to let my complaint move forward and issued the following order, this paragraph dismissing my complaint in its entirety:

Dismissed!

“In the case of Lt. Colonel Donald Sullivan, Plaintiff, v. State of North Carolina, Pender County Sheriff’s Department, Inc., et al, Defendants: Decision by the Court: It is ordered and adjudged that the Court adopts in part and overrules in part the Memorandum and Recommendations [of the Magistrate Judge]. The Court grants in part Defendants’ Motions to Dismiss and/ or for Judgment on the Pleadings [7, 13, 42], and dismisses Plaintiffs Section 1983 Claims. The Court dismisses Plaintiffs State-law claims without prejudice. The Court grants Plaintiffs Motion for Extension of Time [11]. The Court denies all other motions [16-21, 24-25, 30-3 1, 34, 40, 45-56, 48, 50-53, 58]. The Clerk of Court is directed to close the case. Case 7:11-cv-00238-D Document 70 Filed 08/29/12 Page 1 of 2.”

What’s at stake here

Although the dismissal appears simple, it is not. Besides two motions to dismiss, there were 30 other motions filed in this case, with responses and replies to each. The defendants by seven motions wanted sanctions against me for filing a complaint in the first place, all demanding the court to revoke my right to petition the government for redress by issuing a pre-filing injunction. I had never heard of such and thought how ridiculous it was for anyone to assume my right to petition could be regulated. Yet it has recently become “normal” for federal courts to deny or restrict our constitutionally protected right to petition the government for redress. You say, “That can’t happen!” But it does. In my case the motions were denied. Others have not been so fortunate. The recommendation of the magistrate judge to the court in my case was that the motions to deny my future right to petition be granted. Of course, I took vehement exception to the idea and minced no words in my objections.

For years it has been true that “[o]ur government fears anarchy [or the system of government where each individual is responsible for his own security, his own failures, his own justice and his survival]; but it is the right to petition, and only that right, which offers a Republican form of government the ‘safety valve’ needed whenever freeborn men delegate to a few such vast authority to act. For it is the sacred right to petition which guards against frustrations of natural men, which frustrations lead to anarchy and bloodshed” (Quoting Donald W. MacPherson in Tax Fraud and Evasion, page 91).

Unfortunately, it appears the government no longer fears that we will resort to anarchy, so the right to petition is on the block along with all our other rights.

The really odd thing about my case was that the motion to dismiss filed by the State was not written about my complaint but was mistakenly written about my son’s case regarding his arrest and conviction for refusing to answer questions. I filed a motion to strike theirs as “non-responsive,” demanding that they be sanctioned for slandering me with charges and convictions for things I had not done. They did not take kindly to that. Rather than agree that the State’s attorneys had made a mistake, the judge ruled that my motion to strike was actually my response to their erroneous motion to dismiss and allowed their motion by his order above. In so doing he avoided my writ of mandamus demanding an order be issued by the court forcing the State of North Carolina to provide a proper oath to its juries, and my demand for criminal warrants to be issued against the State’s Attorney General and his deputy for attempting to violate my right to petition. Thus, the question of jurors’ oaths was never reached by the court nor was the grand jury summoned to issue indictments against the State’s employees for their violations of 18USC241 and 242.

It was immediately obvious to me that the court, by prematurely dismissing my complaint, had denied me my Seventh Amendment right to a trial by jury. Although it’s done all the time, I just figured no one had ever questioned it on appeal. I was wrong. Short research showed me that the unsavory habit of federal and State courts denying civil plaintiffs jury trials by just such summary judgment has been sustained on appeal numerous times in both State and federal courts including my Fourth District. However, the U. S. Supreme Court has never decided the issue of the constitutionality of summary judgment. I decided not to pursue the issue in my case. My son’s case is much stronger. If his is dismissed by summary judgment, there will be an appeal.

The Seventh Amendment to the United States Constitution guarantees every civil litigant the right to a jury trial: “In Suits at common law… the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by jury, shall be otherwise re-examined in any Court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.” Because the English had often deprived American colonists of an opportunity for a jury trial, the framers of the Constitution placed great importance on the right to a jury trial. With the Seventh Amendment, the framers of the Constitution sought to prevent corruption of, and State encroachment upon, the right to a jury trial in civil cases.

Seventh Amendment in limbo

But certain maneuvers by the courts infringe upon and eliminate the litigant’s right to a jury trial today. Such contrivances (motions to dismiss, for example) and administrative devices (rules of procedure) prevent juries from resolving disputes. These tools, although ignoring the Seventh Amendment’s guarantee to a jury trial, have nevertheless withstood constitutional challenges.

The U. S. Supreme Court has held that “common law” in the Seventh Amendment refers to the English common law as it stood in 1791. No procedure similar to summary judgment existed under English common law, having been eliminated when the “Star Chamber” was discontinued in the 1600s. Summary judgment violates the core principles or “substance” of English common law. These tenets of the common law disallow a court’s deciding whether a “genuine issue as to any material fact” exists, in other words whether a reasonable jury could return a verdict in favor of the non-moving party.

Under today’s standard, in contrast to that common law, judges dictate whether factual inferences from the evidence are reasonable and determine whether a claim may exist, dismissing any case they do not want a jury to hear. A common law court would never abandon its raison d’être in this fashion.

Such power is not granted by the U. S. Constitution. However, cases that should be decided by a jury under the common law and the Seventh Amendment are now routinely dismissed by a wilful judge.

Now is an appropriate time for the U. S. Supreme Court to look again at its course regarding the Seventh Amendment and hold summary judgment unconstitutional. Having recently taken renewed interest in the proper role of a jury under the Sixth Amendment, it would be fitting for the Court to examine this issue in the context of the Seventh Amendment. During the last twelve years when interpreting the Sixth Amendment, the Court has given power back to the criminal jury, emphasizing the historical role of that jury. In comparison, the text of the Seventh Amendment, which requires the court to follow the “common law,” dictates an even more significant role for history in the preservation of our right to a civil jury trial.

As mentioned above, the core principles of the Seventh Amendment emanate from common law, thereby demonstrating the unconstitutionality of summary judgment. In my case, a court having assessed the sufficiency of the evidence, including the reasonableness of factual inferences, has simply dismissed my charges against its unlawful procedures – wholly in contrast with these principles. This phenomenon, having first appeared only about thirty years ago, is relatively new on the judicial scene. For centuries prior, the paradigm for resolving a legal dispute was either a trial or settlement before trial.

Streamlined locomotive

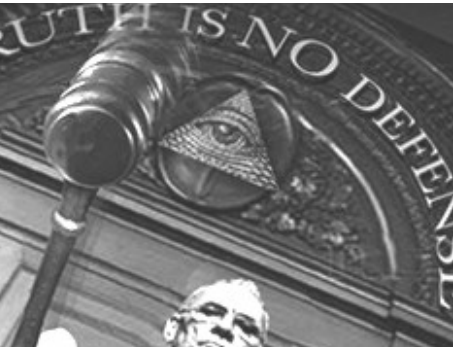

The new option is pretrial adjudication, typically in the form of summary judgment or its equivalent. When one party sues, the defendant who refuses to settle litigates by filing a motion to dismiss or, failing that, later files a motion for summary judgment with the hope of never seeing a jury.

The court is more than willing to allow this pre-trial tactic to lighten the docket load.

As the clerk for the North Carolina Court of Appeals once told me, “The sole purpose of the Rules of Procedure is to reduce the docket.” Judges now grant these motions so often that summary judgment stands alongside trial and settlement as a pillar of our judicial system. Questioning the legitimacy of a summary judgment is today widely regarded as “legal lunacy,” or, in the judicial vernacular, “frivolous” and “futile.”

With so many legal filings regarding “civil” or “constitutional” (not the same) rights violations, the judicial system finds the beauty of this shortcut both obvious and seductive.

The argument is straightforward: When we allow that judge to keep the plaintiff’s lawsuit from coming before a jury on the grounds that no “reasonable jury could find for” the plaintiff, we have violated the constitutional decree that “[i]n suits at common law… the right of trial by jury shall be preserved.” The Supreme Court always interprets the Seventh Amendment to mean that the jury trial right must never be limited further than it was at common law in 1791, otherwise it would not be fully “preserved.”

Neither summary judgment nor anything equivalent existed at common law. It were better we returned to the old paradigms of settlement and trial than maintain today’s reliance on pretrial adjudication as the new dominant mode for resolving disputes. Accordingly, following the Amendment’s historical mandate, the Court must review the issue and declare summary judgment where a jury is demanded unconstitutional.

Tunnel vision or lemmings?

But it won’t, because “the die is cast,” and the United States is on the road to ruin.

The courts have unilaterally gone to great lengths diminishing our rights in order to reduce their dockets. The load put upon federal courts by the arguably never ratified 14th Amendment, which they had eagerly anticipated, has proven too heavy for those liberal champions. Summary judgment offers an escape valve. Coupled with their equally destructive practice, immunity for most government employees and officers, it neatly clears the docket of all but the cases they choose to hear, never mind that this has denied us our right to a trial by jury for three decades.

It is also worthy of note in this context that our legislatures and courts have by now regulated, or completely abrogated, the entire Bill of Rights. I have covered most of those actions in my “Lost Rights” series published by this newspaper based solely on personal experiences with the judiciary. Certainly our “unalienable” rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are gone. The only one left is the Third Amendment’s prohibition against soldiers being housed in our homes in peacetime against our will, which I suspect won’t last much longer now that we’re literally under martial law.

WE ARE UNDONE, and our path as laid out by the Founders in the Declaration of Independence is clear:

“But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same Object, evinces a Design to reduce [our “unalienable rights”] under absolute Despotism, it is their [the “people’s”] right, it is their duty, to throw off such government, and to provide new Guards for their future security.”

As the U. S. Supreme Court put it so eloquently in United States v. Lee, 1882, Robert E. Lee’s heirs having successfully fought off that unconstitutional taking of Arlington Plantation in 1861):

It seems to be opposed to all the principles upon which the rights of the citizen, when brought in collision with the acts of the government, must be determined. In such cases there is no safety for the citizen, except in the protection of the judicial tribunals, for rights which have been invaded by the officers of the government professing to act in its name. There remains to him but the alternative of resistance, which may amount to crime.”

EDITOR’S NOTE

What the world may unknowingly be headed toward lately is a sweeping reduction in the numbers of people who would reduce its population by summary ideas regarding who rates a handout and whom to prohibit from pursuing his interests. Feeding birds and squirrels brings more birds and squirrels; coddling plea-bargainers soon finds the coddling judge up to his elbows in plea-bargainers who’ve no respect for what he calls law. The jury is still out on these arguments.

The Battle of Franklin, Tennessee

30 November will mark its 148th anniversary – one of the bloodiest and most costly campaigns during that misguided Yankee crusade.

By John Peeples
firstfreedom.net

“I AM WITH THE SOUTH in life or in death, in victory or in defeat... I believe the North is about to wage a brutal and unholy war on a people who have done them no wrong, in violation of the Constitution and the fundamental principles of government. They no longer acknowledge that all government derives its validity from the consent of the governed. They are about to invade our peaceful homes, destroy our property and inaugurate a servile insurrection, murder our men and dishonor our women. We propose no invasion of the North, no attack on them, and only ask to be left alone.” Thus spake Major General Patrick Royanne Cleburne (1861). He was killed in the Battle of Franklin.

In late November 1864, the Army of Tennessee under command of Lt. General John Bell Hood was the last Southern army east of the Mississippi still able to mount any sort of offensive action and maneuver, as the Army of Northern Virginia was then besieged by Grant at Richmond. General Hood and his Army of Tennessee on 21 November 1864 started the Confederacy’s last offensive from northern Alabama. Hood had brought his men up thinking to cross the Tennessee River, capture Nashville and move on to the Ohio River if possible. But his old West Point roommate stood between him and the State Capital – Federal forces, some 35,000 men under the command of Major General John M. Schofield, and well entrenched at Franklin.

Many of Schofield’s men had the new Spencer & Henry repeating rifles. He was supported by 34 pieces of his own artillery plus additional artillery from Fort Granger across the Harpeth River behind Franklin.

All for naught

When discussions about frontal assaults on well fortified positions turn to that War of Northern Aggression, the first one that usually figures is Cemetery hill, the 3 July 1863 Gettysburg Campaign also known as Pickett’s Charge. Gettysburg and Franklin are similar, but the latter rarely receives so much attention. Franklin was probably the deadliest battle of the war for Confederate soldiers, considering the numbers killed as a percentage of total casualties. For most engagements, the ratio was around fifteen percent or less. At Gettysburg, the largest battle fought in the Western Hemisphere, that toll rises to 20 percent. At Franklin, it exceeded 25 percent.

Rarely was there a time or place in the war that exceeded the intensity, violence, face-to-face combat and sheer brutality of that first hour at Franklin. Historians estimate that as many as 70 to 80 percent of the casualties at Franklin may have been inflicted during that time. The combat casualties in a single afternoon exceeded the combat dead and wounded of either the War of 1812 or the twenty-month-long Mexican American War, which provided the training ground for those senior Union and Confederate commanders at Franklin.

The Army of Tennessee arrived a couple of miles outside Franklin between 1:00 and 2:00 PM on 30 November 1864. General Hood took a position under a lime tree on Winstead’s Hill and inspected the enemy’s line of fortifications through his field glasses. As Hood’s commanders arrived they each looked for a vantage point to see what they might be facing. Major General Frank Cheatham and Major General Patrick Cleburne also did their surveys, as had Major General Bedford Forrest some time earlier. They stood by, anxiously awaiting Hood’s assessment of the situation. After a few minutes had passed, finally at about 2:00 PM on that 30 November 1864 Hood announced, “We will make the fight.”

To a man, John Bell Hood’s generals on the field that day adamantly disagreed with this decision to make a massive frontal assault on the enemy’s line of fortifications and entrenchments. General Forrest offered his assessment: “General Hood, if you will give me one strong division of infantry with my cavalry, I will... flank the Federals from their works within two hours time.”

Hood, however, didn’t see it that way, replying: “I don’t think the Federals will stand strong pressure from the front. The show of force they are making is a feint... to hold me back from a more vigorous pursuit.”

Unadvised

That was that. Forrest had presented his case and Hood had declined the offer.

Next to speak up was General Cheatham: “I don’t like the looks of this fight. The Federals have an excellent position, and are well fortified.”

General Cleburne echoed Cheatham’s opinion, adding that he thought a frontal assault would result in “a terrible and arm at Little Round Top a reminder. Hood and Major General Lafayette McLaws had each lost just under one third of their men in that July 2nd battle. Nine out of Hood’s 18 regimental commanders at Gettysburg were dead or wounded.

What the Army of Tennessee was about to attempt at Franklin would exceed those feats by General Lee’s army at Gettysburg for human courage and tenacity. Here was a larger force than General Lee had thrown at Cemetery Hill when sending General Longstreet’s 15,000 men of his 1st Corps, Major General George E. Pickett’s division. Those Gettysburg troops, following a 170 piece artillery barrage, had charged across a one-mile expanse of open country and fought for fifty-five minutes.

Hasty

At Franklin there was no pre-cannonade. Hood would not wait for his artillery corps which was enroute from Spring Hill. At Franklin, Hood sent the entire Army of Tennessee, some 25,000 men, across two miles of open field to fight a battle that lasted five hours. And making matters worse for Hood’s men the closer they got to the Federal entrenchments, the Harpeth River began to pinch in from the east so that units on that flank were forced to shift leftward, crowding others off their original line of advance, mixing regiments and brigades together. It was like marching down into a funnel. When they finally reached the enemy’s works, Hood’s entire attacking force would be compressed into a front barely 1,600 yards wide, a continuous fire of rifles and cannons, the noise one continuous roar. So many men packed into such a small space and all fighting for their lives produced a level of horror, bloodshed, violence, brutality and hand-to-hand combat beyond the experience of even the most hardened veterans on either side.

James Barr of the 65th Illinois later gave this description:

I was a reenlisted veteran and went through twenty-seven general engagements, but I am sure that Franklin was the hardest fought field I ever stood upon. Company G 14th Mississippi’s survivor W. G. Bell stated:

There is no language that could picture that battle and there is of little use for me to try.

Tragic “victory”

The late afternoon and early evening fierce fighting was over sometime after 9:00 PM. By midnight Schofield’s army withdrew from their fortifications and crossed the Harpeth River, destination Nashville, to link up with Major General George Henry Thomas’s army; combined forces at Nashville 70,000 strong and well entrenched.

By December 18, 1864, the Federals had reoccupied Franklin, with all its hospitals. Even at that time many of the Confederate wounded had been moved or the walking wounded sent home. Federal troops still reported capturing 3,800 wounded men and 702 other prisoners and finding “1,750 buried on the field.” This would make the Confederate casualties at Franklin 6,252, but the real number could have exceeded 7,000. Particularly hard hit at Franklin were Confederate general and field grade officers. Along with 53 regimental officers, 15 generals were casualties, effectively “gutting” the command structure of several infantry divisions. Total official Federal losses at Franklin were 2,326.

And, somewhere in the face of logic, Hood was able to claim a victory because the enemy had withdrawn, leaving him in command of the field. Hood’s men would beg to differ from that assertion. So will history.

Generals alone

Confederate generals killed at Franklin were Major General Patrick Royanne Cleburne, division commander under Frank Cheatham and the highest ranking, also

By any measure, John Bell Hood’s conduct of the Tennessee Campaign was an unmitigated disaster, for, after bringing 33,000 armed men into Tennessee, Hood must have lost at least 15,952 of them during that 36-day campaign. The Army of Tennessee having contained some of the bravest and most dangerous warriors in the entire Confederate Army, just imagine what those soldiers could have accomplished had they been commanded by Generals Forrest and Cleburne.

Kind reader my pen and courage and ability fail me... Would to God I could tear the page from these memoirs and from my own memory. It is the blackest page in the history of the Lost Cause. It was the bloodiest battle of modern times... It was the finishing stroke to the independence of the Southern Confederacy. I was there I saw it... I cannot describe it. It beggars description. Would to God I had never witnessed such a scene.

Thus did Sam Watkins, Company “H,” 1st Tennessee Infantry of John C. Carter’s brigade, recall the Battle of Franklin.

“Scots independence can gravely hurt UK”

The British government has finally revealed fears of Scottish independence, admitting it could seriously undermine Britain’s international image and position in the eyes of its allies.

The British Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) admitted in a report to the Commons foreign affairs select committee that the referendum for Scottish independence in 2014 will create enough “uncertainty and distraction” for traditional London allies to seek reassurances that Britain “would retain the ability to project influence and military capability.”

While there has been no direct mention of the threats FCO deems would follow the independence vote, it is believed Britain fears it could lose its place as one of the veto-wielding members of the UN Security Council.

There are also fears that a yes vote to an independent Scotland could expose London’s hypocrisy of suppressing its own people’s will while accusing other nations including those in the Middle East and Asia of a clamp-down on the civil rights of their citizens.

The FCO report follows the agreement between British Prime Minister David Cameron and Scottish First Minister Alex Salmond to let Scotland hold an independence referendum in autumn 2014.

The FCO submission to the foreign affairs select committee is another part of parliamentary inquiries launched after the signing of the agreement that examines the implications of an independent Scotland for Britain.

Iran president offers proposals for more influential ECO

presstv.ir
“We should put economic, industrial, agricultural and energy cooperation, trade expansion, barter trade, transactions with national legal tenders and coordinated customs regulations on our agenda, and safeguard our national economies against the negative impacts of paper assets and huge budget deficits in capitalist States.”

Thus spake Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad.

“The U. S.-Israeli rift begs for a pinch of salt,” he added. President Ahmadinejad on October 16 presented seven proposals to the Economic Cooperation Organization (ECO) for the ten-member economic bloc to become more influential.

Addressing an ECO summit in Baku on that date, Ahmadinejad called for the expansion of “political consultations and cooperation within the framework of regional organizations, the Non-Aligned Movement (NAM) and other international bodies.

Call to action

“I propose that a political advisory body under the title of ECO Political Assembly be established for coordination among [ECO] members on an international scale, strengthening friendship, assisting in the settlement of discrepancies, defending the member States’ rights in global centers and undertaking joint efforts for reforming international structures including the United Nations,” said the Iranian president.

Ahmadinejad also called on the ECO member States to broaden their cultural cooperation in light of the valuable legacies they share.

Thinking outside the box

He went on to propose the establishment of an “ECO Scientific and Research Cooperation Organization” to improve scientific and technological cooperation between the ECO members.

“We should put economic, industrial, agricultural and energy cooperation, trade expansion, barter trade, transactions with national legal tenders and coordinated customs regulations on our agenda, and safeguard our national economies against the negative impacts of paper assets and huge budget deficits in capitalist States,” Ahmadinejad told ECO leaders.

A time for cooperation

He urged the ECO member States to complete their railway, maritime, road and air transportation networks, and to take coordinated advantage of the Caspian Sea, Persian Gulf, Sea of Oman, Aegean Sea, Mediterranean Sea and the Black Sea.

“In order to elucidate and promote an independent, humane and justice-based economic attitude, I propose that the ECO Economic Assembly be founded in order to lay the groundwork for senior managers, statesmen, regional and international opinion-makers as well as representatives of the public and private sectors to come together every year to exchange views and offer proper solutions and analyses,” he added.

Despite sanctions U. S. exports to Iran jump by third

Despite increased sanctions against Iran this year, U. S. exports to the Islamic Republic have still increased by about a third, bringing earnings to nearly $50 million higher in the first eight months of this year than in all of 2011.

The U. S. Census Bureau has found that from January through August, exports to Iran totaled $199.5 million, an increase of about one third from last year’s $150.8 during the same period. Most of those exports came from the sale of wheat and other grains, which were valued at $89.2 million and comprised 45 percent of all U. S. exports to Iran, Reuters reports.

Dairy products and medical equipment have also continued to enter Iran, with sales of milk products more than doubling since last year. The sale of such goods is permitted with a Treasury Department export license.

But, had the U. S. stopped exporting wheat to Iran, exports would have declined overall.

American companies have also complained that it is difficult for them to get paid for their sales, since many of Iran’s largest banks have been blacklisted by the U. S. for involvement in terrorism or the country’s nuclear program.

Some Americans, especially religiously affiliated or non-profit groups, have argued that banking sanctions could prevent humanitarian trade.

U. S. drone attacks in Pakistan kill 80% innocent civilians

Americans were once more sane.

presstv.ir
Islamabad has announced that contrary to U. S. claims, 80 percent of the people killed in drone attacks in that country are innocent civilians.

Enough!

Pakistani Interior Minister Rehman Malik made the announcement on October 17.

Talking to reporters outside Parliament, Malik said the total of unmanned aerial vehicle (UAV) attacks conducted in Pakistan amounted to 336 attacks, which have brought about the deaths of 2,300 people.

He went on to say that 96 cross border attacks were launched from Afghanistan.

Pakistani tribal regions are the target of U. S. terror drones, with Washington claiming that its unmanned aircraft are targeting only militants. However, casualty figures indicate that Pakistani civilians are the main victims of the assaults.

The killing of Pakistani civilians, including women and children in the strikes, is straining relations between Islamabad and Washington, and Pakistani officials have sent warnings to the U. S. administration.

Despite the Pakistani government’s repeated calls on Washington to end those drone attacks, the U. S. government still continues its strikes on the tribal regions of the country.

The aerial attacks were initiated by former U. S. President George W. Bush, but have escalated under President Barack Obama.

American officials have said that an agent of the U. S. spy services Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) was among those killed on Oct. 13 during a bombing in southern Afghanistan.

The explosion reportedly also killed Deputy Intelligence Director of Kandahar Province Ghulam Rasool, two of his bodyguards and another Afghan intelligence official.

The so-called insider attacks by Afghan soldiers and officers against U. S.-led foreign forces occupying the country have been on the rise in Afghanistan in recent months and are responsible for nearly 15 percent of all the deaths of foreign troops in the current year.

According to the report, there are no “public statistics” on insider attacks involving the Afghan intelligence agency, the National Directorate of Security, which was trained and financed by the CIA.

This is, however, the first time this year in which an insider attack by an Afghan intelligence officer has led to the death of a U. S.-led agent.

Son of collateral damage

According to the report, an official with NATO’s International Security Assistance Force stated that the Americans did not seem to be the main targets but were “in the wrong place at the wrong time.”

A CIA spokeswoman, however, declined to comment on the incident.

In December 2009, the CIA suffered a major setback in Afghanistan’s Khost Province, where a reportedly Jordanian double agent, whom the CIA. had escorted into a base, blew himself up. That blast killed seven CIA officers, including American contractors.

Will Jewish Zionism bring Armageddon?

Shall we remain as heedless of what this inventor/writer warned our forebears about, or is it finally time to face the challenging facts?

By Henry Ford

The Dearborn Independent, 28 May 1921

When the British Army passed into Jerusalem in the memorable capture of the city in 1917, the Protocols went in with it. A symbolic circle was thus closed, though not in the way the Protocolists had hoped. The man who carried the Protocols knew what they signified, and they were carried not in triumph, but as the plans of the enemies of world liberty.

Zionism is the best advertised of all present Jewish activities and has exerted a greater influence upon world events than the average man realizes. In its more romantic aspects it makes an appeal to Christian as well as to Jew, because there are certain prophecies which are held to concern the return of the Jews to Jerusalem. When this return takes place, certain great events are scheduled to ensue.

Because of this admixture of the religious sentiment, it will be rather difficult for a certain class of people to scrutinize modern Political Zionism; they have been too well propagandized into believing that political Zionism and the “return” promised by the prophets are the same thing. Having succumbed to the initial confusion of mistaking Judah for Israel they have entirely mistaken the ancient writings that relate to these two and have made the single tribe of Judah (whence comes the name Jew) the hub around which all history and humanity swing. Judah was the tribe with which Israel could not live in peace over two thousand years ago, and which has the fateful gift of stirring up the same kind of dissension today. And yet no one ever thought of charging the Ten Tribes of Israel with “anti-Semitism.”

Noted in pre-WWII

Zionism is challenging the attention of the world today because it is creating a situation out of which many believe the next war will come. To adopt a phraseology familiar to students of prophecy, it is believed by many students of world affairs that Armageddon will be the direct result of what is now beginning to be manifested in Palestine.

For these, if for no other reasons, the subject becomes important.

With Zionism as a dream of pious Jews this article has nothing to do. With Zionism as a political fact, every first class government is now compelled to have something to do. It is a bigger question than the German indemnities or American immigration, because it lies back of both, and is rapidly proceeding under cover of both.

It is worthy of note, if only in passing, that Zionism in the active modern political sense took its rise racially and geographically where Bolshevism arose, namely in Russia, and that its center, the seat of its Inner Actions Committee, was at Berlin. There was always a close relationship between the Zionists of Russia and the New York Kehillah, as is evidenced by public utterances made in Russia after the Revolution in which the Kehillah is extolled.

At the time the war was declared in 1914, the Inner Actions Committee was spread about in various countries. For example: Dr. Schmarya Levin, of Berlin, was in the United States and remained here. He was Russian rabbi, German scholar, and cosmopolitan. Although his headquarters were Berlin, he remained in the United States and became recognized as the leader of the leaders of Zionism, until the great Jewish shift to Versailles. Another member of the Inner Actions Committee was one Jacobson, who was in Constantinople. “When he saw that Constantinople could no longer be the center of Zionist politics, he left and went to Copenhagen, Denmark, where in a neutral country he could be of practical usefulness to the Zionists by transmitting information and funds.” (Guide to Zionism, page 80.) In fact, the entire Inner Actions Committee, with headquarters at Berlin, moved freely through a war-locked world, the only exceptions being Warburg and Hantke – and there was no need for the Berlin Warburg to move about, for there were others who represented him.

Change

Dr. Levin gave his sanction for the shifting of the center of Jewish gravity from Berlin to America, and “as early as August 30, 1914, a month after the outbreak of war, an extraordinary conference of American Zionists was called in New York.”

What this change of seat meant, has formed the subject of much discussion. In 1914 the Jews apparently knew more about the probable duration of the war than did the principals. It was not to be a mere excursion through Belgium, as some fancied. There was time to dicker, to show the value of certain Jewish support to the governments. Germany gladly pledged the land of Palestine to the Jews, but the Jews had already seen what Wilhelm had done in that ancient State when he enthroned himself on the Mount of Olives. Evidently, the Allies won the contest of making promises, for on November 2, 1917, when General Allenby was pushing up through Palestine with his British Army, Arthur James Balfour, the British Secretary of State for foreign affairs, issued the famous declaration approving Palestine as a national home for the Jewish people.

“The wording of it came from the British foreign office, but the text had been revised in the Zionist offices in America as well as in England. The British declaration was made in the form in which the Zionists desired it, and the last clauses were added in order to appease a certain section of timid anti-Zionist opinion.” (Guide to Zionism, pages 85-86.)

Mealy-mouthing it

Now please read the declaration and note the italicized clauses just referred to:

“His Majesty’s Government view with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country.”

Zionism is of particular interest, not merely because of the quarrels which have arisen among the leaders over money – it is the war of “interest” against “capital” – but also because of the light it throws on the two great armies of Jews in the world, the way in which they use their power where they can, and the trouble that always embroils the nations which become Jewish tools.

People sometimes ask why Jewry, which is capitalistic, should favor Bolshevism, which is the announced enemy of capital. It is an interesting question. Why should a New York Jewish financier, an officer of the government of the United States, help finance a “Red” publication which even our tolerant government cannot stomach? In addition to the fact that it is only “Gentile capital” that is attacked, the answer is that the Jew who has fallen for the worship of the Golden Calf is anxious to keep in the good graces of the Jew of the East – the Mongolian Jews – who are rampaging against orderly systems of society. It is quite useful when there is a revolution in Paris to have the 600 houses which you may own spared by the incendiary mobs – as were Rothschild’s houses. Zionism has been one of the subjects upon which Western and Eastern Jew can unite. Indeed, it was the Eastern Jew that compelled the Western Jew to take a favorable stand on this matter. The Jewish gentlemen who are receiving the freedom of our cities today in their various aspects as “German” and “British” scientists are Eastern Jews. They have come to a contest with the Jews of America on the question of Money. The Jews of America have smothered some very ugly charges. The Jews of the East, more recently of Germany or England, are not likely to be browbeaten by the moneybags of Jewish New York, for the Eastern type of Jew knows of a situation in which money is the most useless thing in the world – and that is why he is feared and favored by Western Jewry of the Golden Calf.

The Jewish defenders are just now capitalizing the “split” in Jewry. The real split will come when Jews of wisdom begin to support the attempts which have been made to liberate the Jews from their leaders. This internal squabble means nothing but a squabble of leaders; but when the Jews themselves divide, one side for twentieth century light and the destruction of the class power of selfish leaders, then may we look up hopefully. When the Jew recognizes the honesty of his critics and the righteousness of what they charge, then will there be a “split,” but not before. The division in Jewry as evidenced by the contempt of the revolutionary party for the financial party, and as even more strongly evidenced by the fear of the revolutionary party by the financial party, is being brought about by the insincerity of the Western Jew’s Zionism. The Western Jew says that the United States is the Promised Land, profits and interest are the “milk and honey” and New York is Jerusalem; the Jew of Russia has another view.

In denial

A knowledge of Political Zionism is worth while also as an authoritative illustration of what the Jew does when he is in power. Heretofore there has been Russia to illustrate this, but now there is Palestine. With every fact against them, with every traveler and observer giving them the lie direct, there are still Jewish spokesmen and poor befuddled “Gentile fronts” who insist that Bolshevism is not Jewish and that Russia is not now governed by Jews. It is just this constant denial of facts, this failure to use their opportunity to be honest, that is going to be the judgement of Jewish leaders. Bolshevism all over the world, not in Russia only, but in New York, in Chicago, in New Orleans, in San Francisco, is Jewish.

Methodical

However, there is no need further to insist upon that, except occasionally to add confirmatory illustrations of it. More to the present point is Palestine. It will be very difficult for the most irresponsible Jewish spokesman to deny that Palestine is Jewish. The government is Jewish, the plan of procedure is Jewish, the methods used are Jewish. Does anyone rise to deny that? Scarcely.

Very well, Palestine will do to illustrate the genius of the Jew when he comes to power.

Professor Albert T. Clay, in the Atlantic Monthly (will anyone declare that this long-established and thoroughly respectable Boston publication is “anti-Semitic”?) warns us that the information about Palestine which we receive in America comes to us through the Jewish Telegraph Service (which is the Associated Press of world-wide Jewry) and the Zionist propaganda. “The latter,” he says, “with its harrowing stories of pogroms in Europe, and its misrepresentations of the situation in the Near East, has been able to awaken not a little sympathy for the Zionist propaganda.”

Pre-Holocaust Holocausts

This propaganda of pogroms – “thousands upon thousands of Jews killed” – amounts to nothing except as it illustrates the gullibility of the press. No one believes this propaganda, and governments regularly disprove it. But the fact that it continues indicates that something besides facts is necessary to keep the scheme going.

In Jerusalem, as this is being written, martial law is proclaimed. There has been a struggle between the native inhabitants, whom the Balfour declaration sought to protect, and the new-come Jews. As in the famous Easter disorders of the last year, the wounded in the hospitals show that the Jews were armed and the natives fought with whatever weapons they could find on the spot; the conclusion of all impartial observers under the circumstances being that the Jews prepared for and sought the fight with unprepared natives.

The mark of disorder perpetrated by the Jews is all over the place, the “persecuted” turned persecutor, and lest this should be charged to the general wildness of the people in Palestine let it be said that the rioters were only expressing in deeds what cultivated American and English Jews have expressed in words – namely, that the lawful inhabitants of the land ought to be driven out, in spite of governmental promises to the contrary. One of the first Easter rioters, Jabotinsky, whom the British authorities sentenced to 15 years in prison, was released immediately upon the arrival of Sir Herbert Samuel and is now traveling in state and is talked of as a possible successor to Sir Herbert, although he is originally one of the Russian Bolsheviki come down to practice the gentle arts of that tribe in Palestine.

The government is Jewish. Sir Herbert Samuel is High Commissioner, representing the power of the British Government, which holds the mandate over Palestine. The head of the judicial department, who appoints the judges of Palestine, is a Jew. Christian or Moslem judges who do not give the Jews a shade the better of the proceedings are ousted – a condition not unknown in New York. Chaim Weizman is head of the department of works – he is a Jew, now traveling in this country and having the polite lie passed to him occasionally by Judge Julian W. Mack. In fact, at the heads of all departments are Jews, a former New York Jew being head of the department of immigration, who has made splendid rules for the protection of Palestine from an undesirable class of Jews, rules so well adapted for the purpose that if the Congress of the United States should adopt them the cry of “persecution” would girdle the world.

It is to be noted that the Jewish government of Palestine is very much like that of Russia – mostly foreign. Trotsky came from the East Side of New York. A gentleman recently released from Bolshevik custody told the writer that the governor of his prison was an ordinary Jew who formerly lived on Fourteenth street, Detroit. Practically every big American city is represented in the Bolshevik government of Russia. There is another full-fledged government waiting in this country for service wherever necessary.

Conspiring custodians

The methods being adopted to get the land are such as will fill the world with indignation once the world fully understands what is being done. And that it is done with the knowledge and approval of the Zionist Commissioner is indicated by the fact that he suspended the activities of the British officer who endeavored to stop the abuse. It was the old game of lending money at an exorbitant rate of interest to people hard pressed by war and crop failure, and then seizing their land when they could not pay. The bank that did this was the Anglo-Palestine Bank, a Zionist concern. This British officer, to save the people and the land, made arrangements with a British bank to lend them money at 6 1/2 per cent, with five years to pay. If payment failed, the land was to go to the government for redistribution, not to the Zionist bank. This was the humane plan which the Zionist Commissioner forbade, whereupon the British officer resigned. Some effort was afterward made to redress the terrible act, but there it stands as the well-considered action of Jewry in power.

Then follows what is described by every impartial observer as an “arrogant” attempt to expropriate everything in sight. In Russia it could have been done very easily under the plea of “nationalization,” but there was Great Britain whose laws do not condone theft. The only schools that have been established in Jerusalem have been built and manned by the so-called “Gentiles,” although the Jews of Jerusalem have been the pensioners of world-wide Jewry for centuries. As long ago as 1842 Dr. Murray M’Cheyne noted that the Jerusalem Jews cared nothing for schools because their children were only growing up into pensioners too. But Christians, with a warm regard for the Holy City, set about to improve the miserable condition of the Jewish inhabitants, and thus it came that at the time of the Zionist invasion a considerable number of Jewish children were in attendance at the schools. The new-come Zionist leaders demanded that the best of the schools be given up to them. Of course, this was refused.

Obey, or no welfare check

“The Council of Jerusalem Jews” then caused it to be published in the Hebrew daily that parents who did not withdraw their children from the schools would be punished. And now look at the typical punishments threatened:

If any parent refused whose name was on the list of the American Relief Fund, the relief would be withdrawn. An interesting bit of news to subscribers to that fund.

Doctors would be forbidden to visit the families that had children attending the enlightened schools.

Their names would be sent to the black-list at the places where circumcision was performed, so that new-born descendants of the recalcitrants might be refused the rite of Moses.

They would be denied all share in Zionist benefits or funds.

If they were in business, they would be boycotted.

If they were workmen, they could get no work.

“Anyone who refused, let him know that it was forbidden for him to be called by the name of Jew. They will be fought by all lawful means. Their names will be put upon a monument of shame and their deeds made to reproach them to the last generation. If they are supported, their support will cease. If they are rabbis, they will be moved far from their office. They shall be put under the ban and persecuted, and all the world will know that in this justice there has been no mercy.”

It is the Jewish Bolshevik spirit all over again, that spirit which so many people have been vainly endeavoring to reconcile with the Russian temperament – because it is so un-Russian.

A cowardly bravura

It is tyranny, and not the tyranny of strength, but of meanness and darkness. It is now perfectly clear what was meant by Dr. McInnis, who is Anglican Bishop of Jerusalem, when he said: “The emigrants so far brought in (to Palestine, under the Commission) did not include many respectable English Jews; but they did include a great number of Russians, Poles and Rumanians, many of them thoroughly Bolshevik in their attitude to the government.”

If this spirit obtains at the beginning of a movement which the Christian world has been taught by propaganda to regard as a profoundly religious and respectable exodus, it burdens the imagination to forecast what will be done in a period of full and unquestioned rule.

Animal Farm?

Observing and weighing the events and tendencies of Jewish rule thus far in Palestine, it is not difficult to see the purpose in it all. The Jews still distrust their ability to make a State. They do not distrust the world’s willingness to let them have a State; indeed, it is amazing how naturally the Jews place confidence in that portion of the world they have always affected to despise. But deep-seated in the Jew is a distrust of himself. He doesn’t know how his people will contrive to live together. He doesn’t know how they will contrive to drop the principles and practices which are so destructive of social comity elsewhere. And he feels that, patient as the mandatory power may be now, it is doubtful how long that patience will hold out under the blunders and brutalities that will be inseparable from Zionist rule, if any deductions can be drawn from the facts at hand. Therefore, feeling that the time may be short, he is endeavoring by such actions as interference with the cultural question, with the racial rights if the natives, and by such schemes as the land-grabbing device described above, to get so strong a hold on the situation as will seriously complicate it whenever Great Britain shall feel it to be her duty to the world to step in and attempt to bring some kind of order out of the chaos.

It begins to be very clear that Jewish nationalism will develop along the line of enmity to the rest of the world. Already the dangerous proposal has been made to organize a Jewish army for the protection of the Suez Canal. Instead of thinking of roads and farmsteads, of vineyards and oil presses, of schools and sanitary villages, the Jews are thinking of elevating themselves into the military power that shall stand between East and West on that most strategic strip of ground in the world. The whole situation is fraught with danger, and men who wish well to the Jews are alarmed and saddened by the prospect.

There are three elements of danger in the situation as it exists today: the overwhelmingly predominant Bolshevik element that is being poured into Palestine; the intense, egotistic and challenging nationalism that Zionists exhibit even before they get a potato patch – the taste for world politics and world power; and the racial confusion which now exists in Palestine.

These combined are dynamite. The first is more vital than many realize. Already the Jews who have gone to Palestine at great sacrifice and for pious reasons are complaining that instead of the Psalms of David the people are singing songs of the Red Revolution, and instead of meeting for instruction and prayer there are riotous gatherings extolling Trotsky as Messiah and the Soviet as the kingdom of heaven. On the third anniversary of the Jewish Revolution in Russia, the streets of Jerusalem were placarded with sentiments of blasphemy and treason, and May Day this year was devoted to the exaltation of anarchy.

This fact will be of interest to students of prophecy. It is as certain as any human forecast can be that this sort of thing will not be permitted to go forward in the face of the world. It is unimaginable that the nations responsible to humanity for the conduct of that important strip of territory will remain supine while Bolshevism spreads under the false pretense of a religious movement favored by Christendom. An attempt will be made to stop it. The Jews of Palestine will turn on their sponsor nation. The Jews of Russia will come down to help. Great Britain and perhaps the United States will defend the old pure vision of a Jerusalem redeemed. Then will come to pass the prophecy of Zachariah:

“And Judah also shall fight against Jerusalem.”

Judah also! It is a thought to make a Jew bethink himself where the lawlessness of the East and the materialism of the West will lead him. Against Jerusalem! What a terrible ending of Judah’s present mad delusion.

Pivotal

Palestine has been called the center of the earth. It is. The power that controls Palestine controls the world. Although exercising no sovereignty over the land itself, Great Britain’s control of adjacent waters and of Egypt and Persia and India forms the key of her power. The White race has thus far been the Chosen People to whom the dominion of the earth has been given. Palestine is the key to world military strategy and trade. In question 12 of the Questions and Answers published by the department of education, Zionist Organization of America, this occurs:

12. What are the commercial possibilities of Palestine?

The location of Palestine between the three continents favors foreign trade.

All this lends itself to dreams of future glory, and many Christian friends of the Jew have pleased themselves by conceiving an universal Hague at Jerusalem and a new social order going out to bless the nations from Zion. It is the idea conveyed by men like A. A. Berle in books like “The World Significance of a Jewish State.” All this might be expected if the Jews of today were Old Testament people, anxious to re-establish the social laws of Moses, which are conceded to be the best safeguards ever devised against pauperism on the one hand and plutocracy on the other. But Palestine has not fallen into the hands of that sort of Jews. Before the dream can be fulfilled Judah must come to himself, as he has not yet, for from of old the Word is –

“And Judah also shall fight against Jerusalem.”

The racial situation in Palestine just now is very delicate. Americans do not understand it. The Zionist propaganda has always been accepted on the assumption that Palestine is the Jews’ land and that they only need help to go back. It is an historical and political fact that Palestine has not been the Jews’ land for more than 2,000 years. There are in Palestine 500,000 Moslems, 105,000 Christians and 65,000 Jews. The industry of the land is agriculture. Engaged in this are 69 per cent of the Moslems, 46 per cent of the Christians and 19 per cent of the Jews. Neither numerically nor industrially have they held the land. Yet, as the result of a war bargain, it is handed over to them as regardless of the native inhabitants as if Belgium had been handed over to Mexico. Many of the natives are Semites, like the Jews, but they do not want the Jews among them.

That is a strange fact for those who use the term “anti-Semitism”; why do real Semites also dislike the Jews? Surely Semites are not victims of “anti-Semitism.”

The Balfour Declaration, as well as the terms of the Mandate adopted at San Remo, recognized the rights of the native races. Indeed, everyone who knows about the people who have been native to Palestine for 2,000 years recognizes their rights, everybody except the Jews. Bethlehem was a Christian town, as befits the birthplace of Christ. Yet the Jews have contrived that 2,000 Bethlehemites leave Palestine rather than submit to what they see coming. The other races are not so placid about it, hence the trouble. It is now that the last clauses, added as the Zionist historian declares, “in order to appease a certain section of anti-Zionist opinion,” begin to get a meaning for the reader. Was the purpose only to quiet disturbing questions until all the arrangements were made? Evidently. It was then a dishonest appeasement! Such may have been the Zionists’ intention, but no one need expect perjury on the part of the responsible nations. The end of the matter will see those last clauses redeemed by honest application of their terms to the people involved.

General Allenby promised those native races of Palestine that their rights would be respected. So did the Balfour Declaration. So did the San Remo Conference. So also did President Wilson in the twelfth of his Fourteen Points.

But Judah says, “Let them get out!” “The last clauses were added in order to appease a certain section of timid anti-Zionist opinion.”

“Let them get out!” says Israel Zangwill. “We must gently persuade them to ‘trek.’ After all, they have all Arabia with its million square miles, and Israel has not a square inch. There is no particular reason for the Arabs to cling to those few kilometers. To fold their tents and silently to steal away is their proverbial habit; let them exemplify it now.” Aside from the falsity of using the term “Arab,” there is the delightful Jewishness of it – let them give it up to us, we want it! Americans have been in their land less than 150 years as a nation and there is China and Arabia or Siberia for us to go to if we should want to, but we prefer our own country, and so do the native races of Palestine, who have dwelt there for 2,000 years.

The watchmen on the towers of the world are alarmed at what seems brewing in Judah’s geographical caldron.

White Girl Bleed a Lot

The raging success of American racial policy

By Fred Reed
fredoneverything.net

Having just gotten home after three weeks of travel in the U. S., I find on the web yet more accounts of racial attacks on Whites by mobs of Black punks. They grow more common. How long are we going to tolerate this? Why do we put up with it at all?

Because of race. Race almost everything in America, but silently, very silently. The unendingly bad relations between Blacks and Whites determine even things that ostensibly do not involve race. Race determines admission to universities, what tests can be given to students in high school, who has to pass exams for promotions in police departments whether they can read or not, how many of what groups you have to hire. It determines what can be taught in the schools, what standards are required of teachers, what mode of dress must be permitted to students, even whether standard English may be required.

It is everywhere. Beneath the debate of outlawing guns lies race. Conservatives want guns to protect themselves against Blacks, but can't say so. Liberals want to eliminate guns so as to disarm Blacks, of whom they are afraid but cannot say so. If you think this is not true, tell me whom people fear when they buy guns. Are liberals worried about being shot by White, forty-five-year-old duck hunters? Do conservatives expect to find Jewish violinists crawling through their windows at night? Then whom do they fear?

The rash of high-school shootings by White adolescents is a godsend for those opposed to the Second Amendment, since it provides plausible non-racial cover for wanting to illegalize firearms. Race, again.

We decide where to live, where to eat, where it is safe to walk, where to send our children to school, by race. When we get on the subway late at night, which we hesitate to do because of race, we check the race of other passengers when choosing a car. We fear Blacks, especially young ones. We cannot say it. Racial hypocrisy is national policy. A bit back, when John Derbyshire wrote that parents should teach their children to avoid groups of Blacks, outrage arose – from Whites who carefully live in White neighborhoods, carefully send their children to mostly White schools, and themselves never venture into the 'hood. The sin of Derbyshire was to state explicitly a policy which we all practice, but under a shroud of moralistic prevarication.

Now we have the wave of savage attacks by gangs of Blacks against Whites. As any sentient being has noticed, the government and the media diligently hide these attacks. At least, the media have done so in the past. If feral Blacks beat a White man into brain damage, we hear that it was done by teenagers, or youths, or children (Whites are about half of the population of Washington, DC, and the rest are teenagers.) Race determines press coverage. But the censoring works less well now.

Furtive intelligence

The flies in the ointment of suppression are the cell cam, the surveillance camera and the internet, the only free press we have. Increasingly footage of these racial attacks appears on the web. Interestingly, more of it appears on television than was the case in the past. The news presenter will still speak of the perpetrators of flash-mob robberies as “youths” but sometimes will also show the video from the surveillance camera. This is not accidental. The rules are changing.

I once thought that the reporters playing this game of hide the racial Easter egg knew of the intense hatred for Whites prevalent in the Black underclass and feared that if Whites knew what was going on, and reacted, an explosion would occur. This seemed to me at least arguably the best course in the face of an intractable problem. Yet many reporters, especially women, regard any notice taken of misbehavior by Blacks as morally contemptible. They aren't cynically holding the lid on. It is a sincere ideology.

If the problem of race were stable, ignoring it would be one thing. But it is getting worse, which is another. We see now what amounts to a race war of low intensity. Is there a nicer way of putting it? Maybe “an inter-pigmental conflictual situation.” But across the country there occur hundreds of attacks against Whites by ferals, and they are brutal attacks. We are not talking of black eyes and bloody noses. These are assaults by gangs of, er, teens who repeatedly kick the victim in the head while laughing about it.

If you doubt this, I suggest reading White Girl Bleed a Lot, by Colin Flaherty.

Now, if gangs of Whites were similarly attacking Blacks, I would suggest twenty years, no parole. If the victim suffered lasting damage, I would say life, no parole. The dirtballs would get the picture and stop attacking. I would then be beloved of the Washington Post for my stern stand against racism. If I suggest that Blacks be held to the same standard, I will be accused of being blood brother to Julius Streicher and David Duke. See what I mean about everything being race?

Behind the idea of cracking down on racial attacks there always lies, unstated, unadmitted, the image of burning cities. Los Angeles burned because Blacks didn't like a verdict. It could happen again. It could happen in many cities. This has got

“Knockout Games” a hit with Black mobs

Author and journalist Colin Flaherty has shown the integrity and courage to write factual reports about certain “taboo” issues.

Sounds like he'd be a great fit for a certain radio program I know about that blazed a trail in the mainstream media when it comes to reporting on these matters. e video at the bottom of this article.

Here is his latest piece: The “Knockout Games” have come to Pennsylvania: Two bouts. Both on video. Starting in Pittsburgh earlier this month, a mob of six Black people walking through a downtown alley saw Jim Addlespurger coming from the opposite direction.

One of the mob reared back and punched the 50-year-old English teacher in the face. Addlespurger fell to the curb, unconscious, unable to prevent his face from directly striking the curb.

He is recovering at home from his injuries.

Police identified and arrested the assailant, later identified by the Post-Gazette as Dajour Washington.

According to the Post, he told police he was having a bad day. His grandmother, “the Rev. Marlene Green-Davis, said she watched surveillance footage of the attack on the TV news but never thought Dajour could have been involved until her son told her the boy had been arrested. “I can't believe it,” she said. “I lost my appetite. I couldn't eat dinner. Not my baby.”

Rev. Green-Davis said Dajour lived with her for about five years between the ages of 2 and 7 and visits her often, as he did after the teacher was punched.

The assault was captured in living color on security cameras in the alley.

The attacks are part of an epidemic of hundreds of cases of Black mob violence in more than 80 cities over the last three years, as documented in the book White Girl Bleed a Lot: The return of racial violence to America and how the media ignore it.

Dr. Thomas Sowell said he had no idea how bad the problem of mob racial violence was until he read White Girl Bleed a Lot. It has gotten worse since then.

And more people are starting to notice and speak out about it.

The reporters and editors of the local media in Pittsburgh may have thought that race had nothing to do with six Black people attacking a White teacher.

But readers – Black and White – of Pittsburgh news sites posted comments by the hundreds: Most condemning the press for not reporting the race of the suspected criminals. Others said the White people do the same thing all the time so it is not fair selecting Black people for special attention.

Comments to the Post-Gazette's website were disabled. But the CBS affiliate let the comments loose. Said Lil Detroit:

“KDKA radio is running the story without mention of race. The P-G only mentioned it after 7 PM, noting that a 15-year-old had assaulted a teacher, with few details (other than that the perp already had a parole officer).

“The mayor's spokesperson said it was ‘just a random act.’

“Downtown Pittsburgh is not safe, this is just a more notable incident.”

And Ken Plowman observed:

“And if you are assaulted and stand your ground, you are a racist and had no right, maybe even get arrested and put on trial yourself.”

Then came the pushback. Shanaya Jo'neice said:

“I am BLACK! I am a WOMAN! I am not an animal even though you are acting like one. I am not an APE! Both races have crimes it is apart of life. What about The Colorado Movie Theater Shooting, to be at the back of the minds of cops, prosecutors, mayors and Congressmen.

I see columnists, some of them Black, worried that if Obama loses the election, Blacks may riot, as many on Twitter have said they would. They may, or they may not, but you don't have to wonder whether Whites will riot if Romney loses. Perhaps the presidency is a new entitlement.

Portents of things to come

Many Whites are getting sick of the attacks, the crime and the endless demands for special privilege. Being sick of it is of course a Thought Crime and often a firing offense. Having government and the press firmly on the side of the teenagers makes dissent dangerous. But, as hostility grows, as attacks multiply, and as ebooks and the web make suppression harder...I don't see a happy ending.

The problem of race is one of many American problems about which it is impossible to do anything but continue with what we are doing, however poorly it is working. The campaign against drugs is an utter failure, but we can't stop it or change it. The war on Afghanistan is a failure, but we can't stop fighting it. The schools are a disaster, yet we can do nothing but keep on keeping on. So with race. Things will stay the same, or get worse, until they blow as we stand by, paralyzed and muttering clichés.

Virginia Tech, The Columbine etc.?”

Others say Black mob violence against White people in Pittsburgh has been happening for a long time.

“There has been a rash of hate crimes against defenseless White males in Pittsburgh over the last 12 months. Several have been caught on video. No one in the media has had the guts to ask the democratic mayor and Pittsburgh police chief if the FBI should be called in. I guess they are waiting for someone to die.”

Although one person punched the teacher, five others were present at the attack, and made no move to help the victim. Or stop the attacker. They were seen leaving the alley walking with the attacker, laughing and joking.

They were not arrested. At the other end of the State, near Philadelphia, a mob of Black women beat a 48-year old disabled woman. One of the attackers caught the crime on tape.

Soon after, police arrested the six. On the video, they too are laughing and joking.

Police told the Daily Times newspaper: “The girls are defiant. It's like they didn't do anything wrong.”

According to NewsOne: “Local police say that such attacks are common but often go unreported.”

Arab League offers four-point plan to end Syria crisis

The West is sabotaging Syrian peace plans, as NATO’s al-Qaeda wing gets clipped in Syria and the New World Order reels in disorder.

presstv.ir

Arab League deputy secretary general Ahmed Ben Helli has said that efforts are underway to formulate a four-point plan aimed at ending months of unrest in Syria. He says the plan calls for a stop to violence so that talks can be held between all parties involved. Those talks would evaluate a transition in order for the demands of the Syrian people to be met.

The Arab League official, however, did not say which countries or groups are engaged in formulating the plan.

On October 15, UN-Arab League envoy to Syria Lakhdar Brahimi urged an immediate ceasefire which “would help create an environment that would allow a political process to develop.”

Brahimi had been on a regional tour

General view of the Arab League meeting at the Arab League headquarters in Cairo, Egypt aimed at finding a solution to the Syrian crisis, which took him to Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Iran, Iraq and Egypt.

During his visit to Tehran, Brahimi met and held talks with President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, Foreign Minister Ali Akbar

Salehi and Secretary of Iran’s Supreme National Security Council Saeed Jalili, in calling on Iran to help achieve a ceasefire in Syria during the four-day Eid al-Adha (Feast of Sacrifice) starting October 25.

Syria has been experiencing unrest since mid-March 2011. Many people, including large numbers of security forces, have been killed in the violence.

Western States have been calling for Syrian President Bashar al-Assad to step down, but Iran, Russia and China strongly oppose the Western drive to oust Assad.

The Syrian government says that the chaos is being orchestrated from outside the country, and there are reports that a very large number of the armed militants are foreign nationals, mostly from Egypt, Algeria, Saudi Arabia and Afghanistan.

IRELAND UNSUBDUED:

The scorpion and the frog

incogman.net

Undoubtedly because of Jew hasbaRAT complaining, Google Blogger forces you to click on a special button to go on to his site, like it’s all porno or something.

From the Irish Savant

EVERYONE on this blog will be fully familiar with what [Prof.] Kevin MacDonald refers to as the “group evolutionary strategy” of the Jews. The manifestations of this strategy, mass immigration to White lands, undermining Christian cultural institutions, the fostering of White guilt, undermining of our mores, to name but a few, have been spectacularly successful. The strategy has, in my opinion, been easily the most telling factor in reducing Whites to our now increasingly marginalized and degraded status.

What I don’t understand though, looking at it from a group evolutionary perspective, is why they keep rubbing our noses in it with trivial slights that add nothing to their overall objective. Here I’m talking about the equivalent of petty apartheid as applied in South Africa. Christmas has now become almost a swear word, and Christmas trees increasingly rare. Yet a giant Hanukka lamp stands outside the White House at Christmas. Sara Silverman enlists in a Catholic University, and then sues them to pay for her contraceptive pills. That’s poking your finger in the eye. Closer to home, our friend Alan Shatter [right: Ireland’s Jew Minister of Justice and Equality and Minister of Defense] created a little bit of history by banning, for the first time ever, the use of the Irish Army at a Catholic ceremony... while refurbishing the Department of Justice to look like a Holocaust memorial. In England the politicians pushing the banishment of the crucifix are Jewish.

I could go on and on, and you all have your own examples to add. But in fact this is what I’m driving at. The evolutionary strategy might be working fine but it seems poor evolutionary tactics to keep shoving your victims’ faces in it. Especially when you’re in a small minority and relying on the majority’s inability to recognize what’s being done to them. Trivial but blatant attacks on what most of us hold dear are exactly the kind of things that prod a sleeping and stupefied peasantry into dim awareness, and from that into explosive action. Look at history. Some of the greatest and most vicious of conflicts have been sparked by relatively trivial provocations. Albeit with simmering resentments underneath, waiting to be sparked off.

Problem as opportunity

Now conditions at present, and more so in the immediate future, are particularly fraught. Or opportune, depending on your outlook. Without doubt there’s an inchoate slow-burning rage building up among the White working and middle classes all over Europe and the USA. This could be set off by some relatively trivial but nonetheless provocative action. And we know what happens “When the Saxon Began to Hate.” Everyone else gets crushed.

So why then do Jews continue to prod the sleeping tiger? Maybe they feel, and

You figure it out.

OXFORD, Miss. – Campaigning was challenging and winning the election was rewarding, but making history in the process is mind-boggling for Courtney Roxanne Pearson, who recently became the University of Mississippi’s first African-American homecoming queen.

The 21-year-old senior English secondary education major from Memphis won the title in a run-off during annual campus personality elections.

“It couldn’t have come at a better time,” said Pearson, who considers her victory an opportunity for people to see how far the university has advanced in race relations since 1962, when James Meredith’s arrival at and enrollment in the university set off rioting. “Ole Miss, get ready. We just changed the face.”

Pearson received 1,477 votes, compared to 1,387 ballots cast for Ashleigh Davis of Gulfport. She credits her faith and her diverse group of supporters for her successful campaign.

Ms. Pearson may be a nice and decent person, but a homecoming queen she is not.

Surely she must know that.

How the Masters of the Universe infect the internet

Diary of an Israeli shill

veteranstoday.com

I am writing here to come out of the closet as a paid shill. For a little over six months, I was paid to spread disinformation and argue political points on the internet. This forum, www.firstfreedom.net was not one that I was assigned to post on, although other people in the same organization were paid to be here, and I assume they still walk among you. But more on this later.

I quit this job in the latter part of 2011, because I became disgusted with it, and with myself. I realized I couldn’t look myself in the mirror anymore. If this confession triggers some kind of retribution against me, so be it. Part of being a real man in this world is having real values that you stand up for, no matter what the consequences. My story begins in early 2011.

I had been out of work for almost a year after losing my last job in tech support. Increasingly desperate and despondent, I jumped at the chance when a former co-worker called me up and said she had a possible lead for me.

Recession recruit

“It is an unusual job, and one that requires secrecy. But the pay is good. And I know you are a good writer, so it’s something you are suited for.” (Writing has always been a hobby for me.) She gave me only a phone number and an address, in one of the seedier parts of San Francisco, where I live.

Intrigued, I asked her for the company’s URL and some more info. She laughed. “They don’t have a website. Or even a name. You’ll see. Just tell them I referred you.” Yes, it sounded suspicious, but long-term joblessness breeds desperation, and desperation has a funny way of overlooking suspicion when it comes to putting food on the table.

The next day, I arrived at the address – the third floor in a crumbling building. The appearance of the place did not inspire confidence. After walking down a long, filthy linoleum-covered corridor lit by dimly-flickering halogen, I came to the entrance of the office itself: a crudely battered metal door with a sign that said

Hasbaras like the “war” thing: something genetic

“United Amalgamated Industries, Inc.” (Sounds like “Urban Movers.”)

I later learned that this “company” changed its name almost monthly, always using bland names like that which gave no strong impression of what the company actually does. Not too hopeful, I went inside.

The interior was equally shabby. There were a few long tables with folding chairs, at which about a dozen people were tapping away on old, beat-up computers.

There were no decorations or ornaments of any type: not even the standard-issue office ficatrees or plastic ferns. What a dump. Well, beggars can’t be choosers.

The manager, a balding man in his late forties, rose from the only stand-alone desk in the room and came forward with an easy smile. “You must be Chris. Yvette [my ex-co-worker] told me you’d be coming.” [Not our real names]. “Welcome. Let me tell you a little about what we do.”

No interview, nothing. I later learned

The Voice of Israel, the ADL and Abe Foxman

they took people based solely on referral, and that the people making the referrals, like my ex-colleague Yvette, were trained to pick out candidates based on several factors including ability to keep one’s mouth shut, basic writing skills and desperation for work.

We sat down at his desk and he began by asking me a few questions about myself and my background, including my political views (which were basically non-existent). Then he began to explain the job.

“We work on influencing people’s opinions here,” is how he described it. The company’s clients paid them to post on internet message boards and popular chatrooms, as well as in gaming forums and social networks like Facebook and MySpace.

Who were these clients? “Oh, various people,” he said vaguely. “Sometimes private companies, sometimes political groups.”

All too simple

Satisfied that my political views were not strong, he said I would be assigned to political work. “The best people for this type of job are people like you, without strong views,” he said with a laugh. “It might seem counterintuitive, but actually we’ve found that to be the case.”

Well, OK. Fine. As long as it comes with a steady paycheck, I’d believe whatever they wanted me to believe, as the guy in Ghostbusters said. After discussing pay (which was much better than I’d hoped) and a few other details, he then went over the need for absolute privacy and secrecy.

“You can’t tell anyone what we do here. Not your wife, not your dog.” (I have neither, as it happens.) “We’ll give you a cover story and even a phone number and a fake website you can use. You will have to tell people you are a consultant. Since your background is in tech support, that will be your cover job. Is this going to be a problem for you?”

I assured him it would not. “Well, OK. Shall we get started?” “Right now?” I asked, a bit taken aback. “No time like the present!” he said with a hearty laugh.

The rest of the day was taken up with training. Another staff member, a no-nonsense woman in her thirties, was to be my trainer, and training would only last two days. “You seem like a bright guy, you’ll get the hang of it pretty fast, I think,” she said. And indeed, the job was easier than I’d imagined.

My task was simple: I would be assigned to four different websites, with the goal of entering certain discussions and promoting a certain view.

I learned later that some of the personnel were assigned to internet message boards (like me), while others worked on Facebook or chatrooms. It seems these three types of media each have different strategy for shilling, and each shill concentrates on one of the three in particular.

My task? “To support Israel and counter anti-Israeli, anti-Semitic comment posters.” Fine with me. I had no opinions one way or another about Israel, and who likes anti-Semites? Not me, anyway. But I didn’t know too much about the topic.

“That’s OK,” she said. “You’ll pick it up as you go along. For the most part at first you will be doing what we call “meme-patrol.” This is pretty easy. Later if you show promise, we’ll train you for more complex arguments, where more in-depth knowledge is necessary.”

Organized espionage

She handed me two binders with sheets enclosed in limp plastic. The first was labeled simply “Israel” in magic-marker on the cover, and it had two sections.

The first section contained basic background info on the topic. I would have to read and memorize some of this, as time went on. It had internet links for further reading, essays and talking points, and excerpts from some history books.

The second, and larger, section was called “Strat” (short for “strategy”) with long lists of “dialogue pairs.” These were specific responses to specific postings. If a poster wrote something close to “X,” we were supposed to respond with something close to “Y.”

“You have to mix it up a bit, though,” said my trainer. “Otherwise it gets too obvious. Learn to use a thesaurus.”

This section also contained a number of hints for derailing conversations that went too far from what we were attempting.

These strategies included various forms of personal attacks, complaining to the forum moderators, smearing the characters of our opponents, using images and icons effectively, even dragging the tone of the conversation down with sexual innuendo, links to pornography or other such things.

“Sometimes we have to fight dirty,” our trainer told us. “Our opponents don’t hesitate to, so we can’t either.”

The second smaller binder contained information specific to the web sites I would be assigned to. The sites I would work were: xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx, and a handful of smaller sites that rotated depending on need. As stated, I was not assigned to work this forum (although others in my group were), which is part of the reason I am posting this here, rather than elsewhere.

I wanted to post this on xxx at first, but they have banned me from even viewing that site for some reason. (Perhaps they are onto me?) It was the site I spent a good 70% of my time working on.

Cutting the heart out of the internet – industrial deception

The site-specific info in the second binder included a brief history of each site, including recent flame-wars, as well as info on what to avoid on each site so as not to get banned.

It also had quite detailed info on the moderators and the most popular regular posters on each site: location (if known), personality type, topics of interest, background sketch, and even some notes on how to “push the psychological buttons” of different posters. Although I didn’t work for xxx, I did see they had a lot of info on your so-called “WATS” posters here (the ones with gold borders around their edges). “Focus on the popular posters,” my trainer told me.

“These are the influential ones. Each of these is worth 50 to 100 of the lesser known names.” Each popular poster was classified as “hostile,” “friendly” or “indifferent” to my goal. We were advised to cultivate friendship with the friendly posters as well as the mods (basically, by brownnosing and sucking up), and there were even notes on strategies for dealing with specific hostile posters. The info was pretty detailed, but not perfect in every case.

“If you can convert one of the hostile posters from the enemy side to our side, you get a nice bonus. But this doesn’t happen too often, sadly. So mostly you’ll be attacking them and trying to smear them.”

Shillyshallying

At first, like I’ve stated, my job was “meme-patrol.” This was pretty simple and repetitive; it involved countering memes and introducing new memes, and didn’t demand much in-depth knowledge of the subject. Mostly just repetitive posting based on the dialogue pairs in the “Strat” section of the first binder.

A lot of my job was derailing and spamming threads that didn’t go our way, or making accusations of racism and anti-Semitism. Sometimes I had to simply lie and claim a poster said something or did something “in another thread” they really hadn’t said or done

I felt bad about this...but in the end I felt worse about the possibility of losing the first job I’d been able to get since losing my “real” job.

The funny thing was, although I started the job with no strong opinions or political views, after a few weeks of this I became very emotionally wedded to the pro-Israel ideas I was pushing.

The shill as a young man

There must be some psychological factor at work...a good salesman learns to honestly love the products he’s selling, I guess.

It wasn’t long before my responses became fiery and passionate, and I began to learn more about the topic on my own. “This is a good sign,” my trainer told me. “It means you are ready for the next step: complex debate.”

The “complex debate” part involved a fair amount of additional training, including memorizing more detailed information about the specific posters (friendly and hostile) I’d be sparring with. Here, too, there were scripts and suggested lines of argument, but we retained more freedom.

There were a lot of details to this more advanced stage of the job – everything from selecting the right avatar to the use of “demotionals” (humorous images with black borders that one notices floating around the web). Even the proper use of images of cats was discussed.

Sometimes we used faked or photo-shopped images or doctored news reports (and that also bothered me).

I was also given the job of trying to find new recruits, people “like me” who had the personality type, ability to keep a secret, the basic writing/thinking skills plus the desperation necessary to sign on a shill. I was less successful at this part of the job, though, and couldn’t find another in the time I was there.

After a while of doing this, I started to

Riding out the storm

American Dissident Voices
Broadcast of October 13, 2012

By Erich Gliebe
natvan.com

Hello, and welcome back to this week’s broadcast of American Dissident Voices, the internet radio program of North America’s foremost racist organization, the National Alliance. I’m your host and Chairman of the Alliance, Erich Gliebe.

What I’ve found quite interesting so far during the current presidential election campaign, is that there seems to be more of a divide among Jewish voters. And when I say divide, I mean that while the majority of Jews have traditionally voted Democrat, more and more of them appear to be spilling over to the Republican or more conservative side. Although it is estimated that 2008 Republican presidential candidate John McCain received just a mere 21% of the Jewish vote, current Republican challenger Mitt Romney appears to have a solid Jewish voter base. In fact, numerous pro-Romney political ads have been airing on television that are paid for by the Republican Jewish Coalition.

The Republican Jewish Coalition, of course, is quite passionate in its support of and for Israel. The RJC claims it is striving to build a “strong, effective and respected” voice of Jewish Republicans that can influence activities, policies and ideas in Washington and across the country.

And, at a RJC event in Los Angeles a couple of years ago, guest speaker Rep. Michele Bachmann fielded a question by stating that: “If the United States fails to stand with Israel, that is the end of the United States.”

Many Jews have been quite critical of the Obama administration’s policies, and Romney has been more than eager to declare his support for the rogue Zionist State. Of course, no matter which candidate wins the election, support for Israel and Jewish causes will continue, with just slight differences in degree on certain issues.

Anyway, there has been a steady stream of Jews to conservative circles, which also serves as a counterforce to liberals who are not eager to engage in a war with Israel’s new Enemy Number One, the nation of Iran. And Republican conservatives have been quite eager to embrace their new Jewish friends, and money, of course! So, feel bad. Not because of the views I was pushing (as I said, I was first apolitical, then pro-Israel), but because of the simple dishonesty involved. If my arguments were so correct, I wondered, why did we have to do this in the first place? Shouldn’t truth propagate itself naturally, rather than while for years Democrats have enjoyed the finances of the wealthy Jewish liberal George Soros, the Republicans now have billionaire Las Vegas casino magnates Sheldon Adelson and Steve Wynn. Adelson, by the way, is the world’s leading private donor to Jewish education, the Birthright Israel program, and Jerusalem’s Yad Vashem Holocaust memorial. In June, Adelson gave the pro-Mitt Romney Super PAC $10 million. There’s nothing like Jewish money and media support for a political candidate, and Romney certainly knows that.

Perceptions

The talk on the street these days, of course, is the economy, and that is why Romney appeals to a much wider audience than John McCain did four years ago. Romney is looked upon as more of a businessman and CEO with a background in economics, whereas Obama is seen as a social “change agent” and community organizer.

So while I have been predicting an Obama victory, is the tide turning toward Romney’s favor with added Jewish support? We shall soon see.

Gas prices are currently high, and that increases the cost of every other type of consumer item as well, including food. The housing market is on the decline and has been for the last several years, with property values in many areas dipping below what people owe on those properties. Coupled with the overextension of credit, these issues have caused lending institutions to tighten up on the money they would normally lend out to businesses to feed the economy. The problem isn’t just in the U. S.; the economies of several nations in Europe and Asia also look bleak. The worldwide economic picture is uncertain. Those are the times we find ourselves in today.

Integrity

Understandably, all of this has the vast majority of White Americans worried. Obviously, there’s absolutely nothing that we in the National Alliance can do to pull the U. S. out of the economic slump. So the two concerns for us are these: One, do what you can to keep yourself and your own family out of economic trouble, and two, we have to keep the Alliance going and – believe it or not – growing during this turbulent time.

A bad economy can have an unknown effect on support for our task. On the one hand, prospective new White racial activists might hedge at joining the Alliance because they don’t want to pay dues, which would further tighten family budgets. In addition, there is the massive pressure of the Jewish media and the government using scare tactics in an attempt to frighten people away. So we shouldn’t be surprised if our growth and activism stagnates over the next few years, assuming the poor economy continues for a while.

But don’t count on it, because history tells a story that is at least equally compelling, through, well...propaganda?

By way of deception

And, just who was behind this whole operation, anyway? Who was signing my paychecks? The stress, lying to my parents and friends about being “a consultant,” was also getting to me. Finally, I said enough was enough.

I quit in September 2011. Since then I’ve been working a series of unglamorous temp office jobs for lower pay. But at least I’m not making a living lying and heckling people who come online to express their views and exercise freedom of speech.

A few days ago I happened to be in the same neighborhood and on a whim thought I’d check out the old office. It turns out the operation is gone, having moved on.

This, too, I understood, is part of their

and quite possibly more so. National Socialism was born during the early part of the last century in a Germany that was reeling economically under the yoke of the infamous Treaty of Versailles, which placed the entire blame for the First World War on Germany’s shoulders, as well as the obligation to pay war reparations to the victorious nations of the Entente.

Faith

Hitler’s struggle for the self-emancipation of Germany was a small movement for several years. During those early years, there was no shortage of economic hardship for the German people and no shortage of effort on the part of the NSDAP to awaken the consciousness of the German people. But, after the stock market crash of 1929 which set off the Great Depression, the economic hardships of Germans increased exponentially. Yet, instead of retreating into their own personal lives and fortunes, the magnified hardship brought Germans out of their shells and made them look for new solutions to Germany’s problems.

And, when they found those new solutions in the program of the NSDAP, they threw their support behind Hitler. The Party grew immensely within a short period of time and, barely three years after the Crash of ’29, Hitler took power as the legally-elected Chancellor of Germany. It was a remarkable turn of events for a man who had been imprisoned less than ten years earlier on charges of leading the unsuccessful Beer Hall Putsch, and for an organization that had the smallest of followings for years following its inception.

Of course, just because the German National Socialists experienced massive growth when the economy went south doesn’t mean that we will in the Alliance. We can’t take any solace in the old adage, “History repeats itself,” because every era has its own set of circumstances and, obviously, the people of one era are not the same ones who were around in a previous era. So we can’t just “go with the flow” and expect that we’ll have the same sort of success in these trying economic times that the NSDAP had in the late 1920s and early 1930s.

Pathfinding

And do you know what? We don’t want history to repeat itself. For the last few hundred years at least – and some would argue for a much longer period than that – our ancestors have come up short in promoting the survival and progress of our race. They have chosen short-term goals over long-term ones; they have greedily chosen individual success over group success; they have opted to give money more weight than blood; they have dealt with their own personal – often financial – concerns and have allowed aliens to take over our media so that the ideas we are exposed to are the ones that are pushing us towards extinction. That’s why the White race is in such a bind today, and so I say, “To hell with history. It’s the future we’re after.”

That future that we’re after is the future of the entire White race. Wherever there are White people on this planet, we intend to unify those of good will among them and to clear a large space on this continent that will be home to as many of those White as have a desire for a homogeneous racial State. Once we have achieved such a State in North America, we will try to do so elsewhere, first in Europe, and then on other continents.

A time for our good men

That is a huge job that is before us, and you might be doubting whether or not we are up to the task. But, thinking back to 1924, when Hitler entered Landsberg prison, how many of even the most loyal National Socialists could have predicted their eventual rise to power less than a decade hence? How many of them doubted, and then quit? How many believed, and stayed in the fight? And – most importantly – how many doubted, and yet overcame their doubts and stayed in the fight, for whatever reason – whether it was a devotion to a man or to a cause or to his own honor? There are times when every man is wracked with doubt, but only the honorable man continues to do what is right until the doubt is vaporized and is once again replaced by absolute certainty that success is within reach.

Success is within our reach. We have to weather the storm of the current conditions, both political and economic. There is no guarantee of success, but neither is there any guarantee of failure. All we can do is to give our noble cause your very best and most devoted effort.

The pantheon of our race’s heroes is not limited to great military and political leaders, directors of nations, and the philosophers of racialism and the Life Force. The pantheon is open to otherwise ordinary White men and women who perform extraordinary acts of dedication so that the halls of that pantheon are continually flushed with new White heroes of every successive generation. Let’s not only keep the halls of the pantheon open...let’s earn a place there ourselves.

I’m Erich Gliebe, and thanks for being with me again today.

Proud to be an American, where at least I’m told I’m free World Zionism is the architect of global terrorism, the man behind the curtain if you will. Ever since the establishment of that terrorist State of Israel in 1948, there has been a major increase in violent terrorist acts all around the globe. The world has plunged into an era of chaos, destruction, war, tyranny and strife, and all this satanic madness can be traced back to International Jewry’s doorstep, Tel Aviv.

Israel is engaged in a global “strategy of tension,” a maniacal effort designed to drive a wedge between the Western world and the Islamic world.

The mediacracy

“Like blackbirds in flight, packs of reporters darken the sky, moving in swarms at the same speed and in predictable trajectory. When one lands, they all land. When one leaves, they all leave. The programmers and channel controllers from all the stations are part of the same well-paid elite, steeped in the same values, committed to the mission of maximizing audience share and profits. They are chosen for their ability to play the game and not challenge the audience with too many controversial ideas or critical perspectives. It’s no surprise that they circulate easily within the commanding heights of media power, moving from company to company and job to job. A kind of group think corporate consensus, steeped in market logic and deeply inbred by an un-brave news culture, breeds conscience-free conformity and self-censorship. This makes frightening sense in a globalized economy where consumerism is more desired than active citizenship, power is increasingly concentrated and the public is increasingly unwelcome in a public discourse defined by the powerful. If your goal is to numb people and drive them away from active participation, then TV as “weapon of mass distraction” and wall-to-wall entertainment

Arab States demand action against Israel

“The Arab Group deplores the continuous Israeli violations against the Palestinian population in the occupied Palestinian territory, including the blockade, aerial bombardments and extrajudicial killings,” said a Monday statement read out by the Egyptian permanent representative to the United Nations Mootaz Ahmadein Khalil.

Addressing the UNSC in an open meeting on the latest developments in the Middle East, particularly the issue of Palestine, Khalil reiterated that the aggressions against the people of Palestine by Israeli settlers has “reached unprecedented levels.”

Israeli settlers, mostly armed, regularly attack Palestinian villages and farms and set fire to their mosques, olive groves and other properties in the occupied West Bank under the so-called “price tag” policy. However, the Tel Aviv regime rarely detains the assailants.

“Our Western friends seem to think that war is the key to saving their economy, when their constant thirst for war is what is partially wrong with their economy. The other part is they have outsourced almost their entire economy and industry to

The Holocaust Industry /Finkelstein

By Christine Miller

millercbm@msn.com

Little Hungary is getting uppity. Not only did the Hungarian government kick out Monsanto and its genetically engineered corn, but was also reckless enough to take on the Jewish Claims Conference. I found the following small article in the National Zeitung (9/7/2012).

The French News Agency AFP reports: Hungary demands of the Jewish Claims Conference a restitution of moneys plus interest paid out as compensation for Hungarian Holocaust victims. This organization which is headquartered in New York can not verify that the money was handed over to the people for whom it was destined.

The Jewish Claims Conference is the most important organization for the compensation of Jews. It was repeatedly suspected of having misappropriated the compensation moneys. The position of Israel Singer, former Secretary General of this organization, was abruptly terminated on account of misappropriation.

In contrast to Hungary, how differently and craven the Germans behave! There, When money paid out for “Holocaust” victims vanishes, the Claims Organization just goes back to the well again and gets some more.

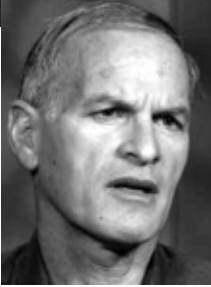

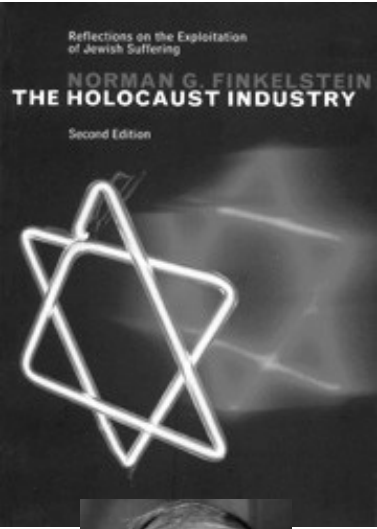

That little blurb about Hungary made me dig out and reread The Holocaust Industry, by Norman G. Finkelstein. The author is a fence sitter. One leg he dangles in the Revisionist camp, the other is with the Exterminationists. He is ein Wanderer zwischen zwei Welten, at home in none. But only the Jewish establishment persecutes him with their hate. Jews only tolerate fellow Jews with both feet solidly planted on Jewish Zionist ground and that means supporting the Holocaust Industry. I use the collective noun Jews. Please do not take offense. Collective nouns are always used without a disclaimer: The Jury, the American Army, the Germans (who killed six million Jews), etc. There are Jews who do not support the Holocaust fraud. David Cole comes to my mind. But these Jews can be counted on one hand.

In early 2007 De Paul University’s Political Science Department voted nine to three... in favor of granting Finkelstein tenure. Three opposing faculty members were supported by the Dean of the College, Chuck Suchar. Suchar stated he was opposed to tenure because of Finkelstein’s personal and reputation-demeaning attacks on Alan Dershowitz, Benny Morris and Holocaust authors Elie Wiesel and Jerzy Kosinski, which were “inconsistent with DePaul’s ‘Vincentian’ values.”

The University’s president, Rev. Dennis Holtschneider, seconded this decision.

Many men of the cloth have become hirelings of the Jews. They are no longer good shepherds but have abandoned their flocks. “Tomorrow I will burn you as the worst of heretics” are the words flung at Jesus by the Grand Inquisitor speaking in Dostoyevsky’s The Brothers Karamazov. If Jesus should come again today, many priests and ministers would join the clamor for his crucifixion; for Jesus would not be politically correct.

Now to Finkelstein’s revisionist leg. “All the hype notwithstanding, there is no evidence that Holocaust deniers exert any more influence in the United States than the flat earth society does. Given the nonsense churned out daily by the Holocaust industry, the wonder is that there are so few skeptics (p.68).” All too true! However, Finkelstein’s persistent theme is: The Holocaust industry is a blackmailing and extortion racket.

Always the money

I followed the attacks on Switzerland eagerly and hoped that country would not cave in. For a short moment the Swiss tried to fight back by threatening to open and publish the Red Cross Files on the German concentration camps, and that would have blown the Holocaust fraud sky high.

But the Swiss, forever prudent, counted their money and decided it would be cheaper to pay those blackmailers. The mantra of the Holocaust industry was and is: Compensation is about truth and justice, not money. The Swiss quipped: It is not about money; it’s about more money. The weapon used to break Swiss resistance was an economic boycott. The main players (seconded by a large support group: Clinton, D’Amato, Bronfman, etc.), New York City Comptroller Alan Hevesi and New York State Comptroller Carl McCall, invest billions of dollars in pension funds. Hevesi in addition presided over the U. S. Comptroller’s Association, which invested $30 trillion. In May 1997, the city of Los Angeles, withdrawing hundreds of millions of dollars in pension funds from a Swiss bank, imposed the first sanction. Hevesi followed with sanctions in New York. California, Massachusetts and Illinois joined within days. “I want $3 billion or northward,” Bronfman proclaimed in December 1997, “in order to end it all, the class action suits, the Volker Process and the rest.” The settlement amounted to 1.25 billion. (The Holocaust Industry, pp. 101-102.)

Paradox

I ask myself: How can Finkelstein be so discerningly honest on one hand but dumb and dishonest on the other? “To document widespread holocaust denial Lipstadt cites a handful of crank publications. Her piece de resistance is Arthur Butz, a nonentity... who published his book The Hoax of the Twentieth Century with an obscure press... Were it not for the likes of Lipstadt, no one would have ever heard of Arthur Butz (page 68).”

I have The Hoax of the Twentieth Century (3rd edition). The book is well researched, written and documented.

Deindustrialized human

Jewish greed is gigantic. Its extortion racket is horrific. I puzzled a lot about Finkelstein and his book, The Holocaust Industry. Does he fear a backlash? “If you prick me, don’t I bleed, if you poison me don’t I die and if you extort me don’t I start to hate?” There are hints of this fear in his book. Maybe that is the answer.

WHAT WE DESERVE

One of the most dangerous things is an uninformed and apathetic electorate. Most Americans have shallow minds when it comes to politics and the real issues of the country. We’re in this mess because the people have failed to keep eternal vigilance on what their government has been doing. Unfortunately, Americans remain loyal to their party no matter if the country is going “to hell in a handbasket.” The two major parties every four years put on the biggest charade, trying to look so different but in reality being the same. They play this game and the American people fall for it. Party loyalty is not the solution, and neither is voting for the lesser of two evils; we still get evil.

Those two major parties have played a big hand in wrecking this country.

REFERENDUM 2012

Somebody booby-trapped the Democratic conventions in getting same-sex marriage included on their platform and endorsed by the President! This changed the key issues of the reelection process into a referendum over the gay rights agenda!

A case in point is the disrespect shown our troops and military leaders by revoking the “don’t ask, don’t tell” provisions for “gays” in the armed forces. This is only a sample of what we can expect should that referendum go the wrong way.

Of course, any party that believes the way to deal with a weak economy and high unemployment is to add hundreds of thousands of new government jobs, print billions of dollars as new bogus money and manage government expenditures for three years without an approved budget presents a pitiful spectacle to all hard-working Americans.

NOT GUILTY

I have just begun receiving TFF. God it feels good to know others feel as I do, love truth and respect those who’ve the guts to print or speak it. I’m not well-liked here in Seattle, a very leftist, bleeding heart city. The fact that I don’t hide my anti-liberal ideology irks the dihard Obamunists. Even worse is the fact that I display a Confederate Battle Flag and White Pride patch on my jacket. I refuse to buy that guilt trip the left lays on the bleeding heart sheeple. I tell them that “Equal rights means equal, not special, and I’m cashing in on my equal right to pride in my race, my people, my heritage, my traditions and my ancestry.” They hate it when I tell ’em, if they want to carry the shame and guilt baggage, carry mine as well.

8 JUNE 1967

A day that will live in infamy – the day America was attacked and then betrayed by the President!

To all American patriots, veterans and non-veterans alike: What befell those 34 killed and over 170 wounded on the USS Liberty is a disgrace and a slap in the face of every American. Then, adding insult to injury, U. S. President L. B. Johnson called back help that was on its way. That was treason at the highest level. Then those Zionist bloodsuckers had the nerve to say it was a mistake. The only mistake was that we had a coward in the White House who by his disgraceful actions did not retaliate and defend those brave American sailors. However, our yearly allowance (billions) to these sneaky Zionist vultures continues uninterrupted. If that is not an insult to our country, flag and all American service men, then I don’t what is.

I think it’s time for the American people to act to avenge the disgrace we suffered as a country on 8 June 1967. Now is the time for every red-blooded American patriot to write or call every congressman, senator, State and U. S. Representative to vote no on any and all aid to Israel immediately. “Failure to do so will result in your getting un-elected in the next election.” I’m sure that will get their attention. Then, poetic justice: let the building that housed that “Holocaust” museum be emptied out and made into a museum honoring the memory and sacrifice of those men attacked on the USS Liberty. What better place to put it than in the building of the perpetrating nation, in the city that the betrayal order came from? As far as the contents of that building, put them on a ship and send them to Israel where they belong; or, if the Jews don’t want them, into the Atlantic Ocean.

Any monuments or memorials paid for by taxpayers in this country should honor Americans or those who have come to our aid and helped us in an extraordinary way, not a back-stabbing, bloodsucking bunch of Zionist vultures.

INTEGRITY

When 29-year-old Ken Webber, married and father of four, lost his Oregon school bus driver’s job because of a Confederate flag hanging on the antenna of his personal truck, Tom Boardman stepped forward and successfully defended that right, salvaging Ken’s livelihood, showing how it’s done. If we don’t fight for our rights, they’ll never survive ZOG’s propaganda on TV. Do you expect anything to change without some of us fighting? We must stop watching TV and get up off our backsides. If you want magic, visit Disneyland or go see David Copperfield. The only magic coming our way just now is the magic of mind control coming at us from Zionist indoctrination propaganda televised right into the home. Let’s regroup, thank the Tom Boardmans and protect these rights remaining.

BASIC COMMON SENSE

“A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.” – Amendment II

Is there any question here as to what this means? I would think not. It’s clear and precise. But many Americans today would give up this protected right. Do they really believe that gun control, or allowing only the police to be legally armed, would make them safer?

At Aurora, Colorado, on July 20 no one had a chance to stop that ZOG conspiracy by one or more gunmen. On this day four percent of Colorado’s residents possessed concealed-carry permits, but couldn’t enter the theater armed because it was labeled a “Gun Free Zone.” Thanks a lot, Gun Free Zone, for costing those families an easily preventable shooting/mass murder! If you wouldn’t put one of these “Gun Free Zone” signs out in front of your home, why place them before movie theaters or schools?

CATTLE CHUTE

Part three of Mr. Peeples’ series (TFF September) pointed out the dire state of America’s social programs anywhere ZOG controls the purse strings. Our universities are full of Jewish/Marxist administrators and faculty, and have become mere places for socialization – promulgating outlooks, attitudes and “values.” Their main goal is to produce locksteppers who will perpetuate ZOG’s social and economic system. Few go to college and bring back skills to their communities. Instead, most of them serve the status quo they were trained for after that four-year attitude adjustment process. ZOG’s system protects itself by producing people with “know how” rather than why.

QUESTION

On Halloran Hill’s WNOX program the morning of October 15th, the topic was: are you subject to peer pressure for the way you vote (or words to that effect).

A young man called in, saying he was a White male, but had two Black friends. He stated that they always voted Democratic because Lincoln was a Democrat and since Lincoln freed the slaves they consistently vote Democrat.

Halloran Hill replied, “Lincoln was a Republican.”

The young man blurted, “Well, I didn’t know that he was a Republican.”

Can anybody tell me why such people should be allowed to vote?

NOT BUYING IT

It infuriates me to hear medical-industry reps ranting about the superiority of the United States healthcare system. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Big Pharma/FDA/AMA triumvirate is a major contributor to America’s economic ills. Medicare and Medicaid are fraught with corruption. They have far more to do with greedy providers’ wealth than recipient patients’ health. Drugs never cure anything. They merely mask symptoms, and often carry side effects that are worse than the diseases they flagrantly are vaunted to treat in those ludicrous TV ads.

Rapidly approaching age 91, I attribute my superior health and longevity to total abstinence from both Rx and OTC drugs – staying as far from doctors’ offices and clinics as possible.

I still have all my marbles; I’m playing with a full deck.

In spite of disinformation, the odds favor our continuance

By Olaf Childress
editor@firstfreedom.net

Everything moves in cycles. That’s life. Is God angry with us when our fortunes turn North? Not. Endlessly provided with fresh challenges, let all worthy survivors welcome these latest trials. Anger finds no way around them, so we mustn’t hate, but stay cool. And think.

Without exercise, a body or mind soon atrophies. Failure to keep ourselves in top shape tempts whatever might exert greater force and displace us. Recognizing today’s problems as opportunities in disguise, one further matures these inherited principles.

Western civilization wasn’t invented in Africa or Asia, and it’s a great mistake to think we can solve their age-old problems with new strains of rice, technical advisors or regime-changing assassination squads. The starvation that meddling everywhere sought to eliminate, American factories we let slip away as affirmative action for Wall Street and all this democracy-spreading by the wagon load have brought more hunger than ever to a faster-breeding Third World, joblessness here at home and ubiquitous military regimes. Isn’t it about time some of us started wising up?

Survival is every individual’s foremost interest. By contrast, nature provokes all alike to remain worthy of enfranchisement within a delimited biosphere. Anyone who would shove others out front in his stead deceives mainly himself, for timeless truth demands an account of each sentient being.

Sorting the sacrificial lambs

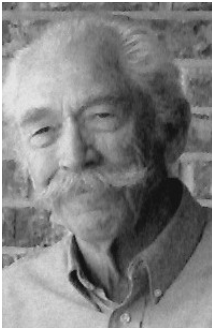

Though life’s tests are hard, we mustn’t think them cruel. No man in his right mind takes the easy way out. Nature’s quandary as final arbiter remains a job you wouldn’t want; for evil is but a lesser good, darkness no more than light’s absence, cold the lack of heat, dreamland reality’s vacation, and this imperfect world just possibly a perfect God’s musing.

As nocturnal slumber perceives without question one’s temporal existence, so does the rational morning sense a higher estate. Very stubborn indeed the so-called atheist who can’t imagine rubbing confusion from his eyes when, on a distant future or even perceptibly nigh awakening, he will realize that all of life’s provocations were nothing more than fleeting glimpses into wonders beyond mortal comprehension.

So a certain obstinacy in the face of this “scientific” reflection and speculation may turn the key. We need but remember how real last night’s dream was.

Unfortunately for all too many walking automatons lately, at wake-up time there’s nothing to recall. Having slouched six or seven hours before a television screen the prior day numbing one’s old gray matter, then resting, a mind having lost so much opportunity for exercising its own unique imagination prior to bedtime once asleep will have little thought of anything further.

TV commercials and programs alike are turning us into morons; the world laughs at us for trying to cure all its problems while imitating those absurd images of who we are. Yes, we did create, with our own blood, sweat, prayers and tears the America that’s slipping away, never having stolen a crumb from an African’s mouth nor counterfeited any Asian’s brand name. We should feel guilty? For what? Let those propagandists vacate our shores, go back to the steppes.

And, inasmuch as there’s not room on the planet for more “useless eaters” than its carrying capacity (a term ironically coined by parasitic mediacrats), rather than wait for televised instructions from those who would conscript us to fight their wars, let’s vote “none of the above,” turn that thing off and ourselves elect which dragons we shall deal with.

The pilgrim journeying through various climes welcomes his trials. True obligation puts more confidence in reason than man’s law when facing perfunctory officials or bystanders who, misapprehending such a mind at peace, think him a troublemaker for doubting What Everybody Knows. The worthy and ignoble alike consider justice as advancing their own beliefs, even and especially to the detriment of those who disagree with them.

What everybody actually senses is that we have arrived at another Babylon. Look anywhere, hear or see the incessant taunt: “It’s the Twenty-First Century! You White moralists don’t fit in with these liberating times, so stay out of equality’s way or get ‘dispatched’ as intolerant terrorists!”

Mediacrat ranting

How did it come to this? Our opposites – who, by the way, despite their conspiracy having commandeered the money, media and moronic fedguy, remain a minority – are only bluffing. They’ve not convinced a sufficient force to displace us. Look again! Among each dozen people you randomly meet in our White culture, what number of them sport pornographic clothing or other insignia boasting a “done deal”? One? Not even. Yet the media publish these images depicting Caucasians as boobs in contrast to educated Africans, race mixing couples and macho brown perverts, totally unreal, no great return on investment because the minds they feel exercised to capture give no more than fleeting glances toward all that drivel, leaving them stuck with only the same ones long addicted to the raucous noises, persistent images and stale ideas tailored for dolts who no longer dream.

So what does the crafty gambler do with those fading fed reserve notes since porn stocks are in a nosedive? He doubles his bets. Casinos call that the endgame, where desperados often lose it.

Then and now

In those heady years shortly after their slave trading between Africa and Rhode Island ended with the incipient Industrial Revolution’s disinterest, Northern bankers found it not only possible but profitable to convert such excess stock into indentures on Southern plantations, a gold vein while it lasted. Fewer than one Yankee in a dozen fell for their next gamble, the shrill cry for loosing those same Africans on a hapless Southland as prelude for the biggest and most profitable war in history. Which is not the way it began, however, as a contented plantation slave for the most part was no myth; so they had to stage what amounted to that era’s Tonkin Bay Incident.

The difference between then and now is that today’s “armaments” have become a bit more “equally” divided. War profiteers aren’t the only ones employing computers, analysts and agents. We pilgrims, even if less crafty, nevertheless access much of the same information as they, systematically deciphering their historical maneuverings. Maybe that’s not “equal” firepower, but, in addition to outnumbering them more than a dozen to one, we’re using a weapon whose efficacy those atheists can’t imagine.

So put yourself on the Devil’s hoofs.

Everything above conceded and the fiery pit looking to burn out utterly, what could you do? Well, first off, that won’t happen. Evil is merely the absence of good, never a thing so positive or satisfying as can stay out in the open with no secret handshakes or hidey holes. It’s a bucketful of clawing crabs, where the only way up is by kicking another down. Does Satan tell his disciples fighting in that pail about the Golden Rule? Okay, you wouldn’t want his job either, but somebody’s gotta do it.

Balance

Why? Because all things spring from their opposites – the sine qua non of life, whose total negation is mere theory. So a misguided emancipator can’t do away with obedient servitude completely, since some people always see their welfare-dispensing master in no less positive a light than what he offers: freedom from decision-making responsibilities. Casual integration brings sinister forces seeking to climb up and over not just the easy ones who lack a clue, but separatists capable of doing arithmetic and solving problems all by themselves. How to crack those tougher nuts? With threats, propaganda, intimidation, boycotts, taunts, espionage, hiding the problem’s factors by presenting a false equation. Granted, that’s cheating; but somebody’s gotta do it. The lowest scoundrel can always sink further, or rise, even as saints may fall.

Whether standing pat on principles and opting for None Of The Above where no real choice appears, or choosing “the lesser evil” as do those who raise that white flag, one defines himself constantly. Most of our dozen promote decadence by applauding the less obnoxious entertainer rather than booing such “electoral” performances off the stage completely. Mesmerized by TV, they have studiously learned to trust each quadrennial opera, even feel a little guilty when it comes up shy of happy-ending the fairy tales those choreographers introduce.

Yet one Aryan out of that same dozen will survive unscathed and, prudent about protecting his children from The Deceiver, salvage what’s left before carrying on from adversity to the stars. But he must fight for it an entire lifetime, sometimes running the gauntlet of his own vision-impaired allies.

Between today and that Saxon’s arrival at some planetary next station, he must trek first to where Chewbacca, Sodahead and Sulu boarded his ship then ran it aground, offload them onto their more accustomed kayak or dhow and relaunch solely among those of like blood; or maybe even retrace the source of his sovereignty to the limits of its memory, and from that Runnymede restart European man’s republican State. Let us this time reflect more carefully on the inevitability and necessity of perpetual conflict between kindred individuals as a benefit to each tribe, when compared with destructive wars ruining not only whoever starts them but the most promising youth of diverse lands, for international bloodshed nearly always involves several belligerent peoples.

Rethinking

Knowing claims and counter-arguments will arise, we’ll do well anticipating some of them. Let there cease to be “universal” treaties; they’ve all failed us! The so-called federal government presuming legitimacy today as “elected” according to the United States Constitution is no such thing. Also fatherless, “corporations” agitating us ever toward another “wartime economy” bring to that bloodsucker slithering alongside the Potomac their briefcases full of cash, but then pull out arms contracts designed by themselves.

That’s the problem in a nutshell, and an opportunity exceeding what the Founders faced by far. Their States were united, of a single blood, isolated between Earth’s two greatest oceans, the news media undefiled; so naturally they trusted one another when entering into what was basically a mutual defense compact, though entailing various other agreements as well. They realized in eluding Europe’s Shylocks that it was only for a time, documenting that sentiment on many occasions while composing the most brilliant national constitution ever written.

As the eternal conflict continues, today we thank our forebears for having bought us time, while praying guidance from the same God they worshiped. Now we enjoy more leisurely comforts and greater clarity of what forces oppose us. We have finally learned how those well-oiled propaganda blades came to subvert our governments, schools and institutions, the double-edged sword tempered at Silicon Valley proving at last a match for their shenanigans.

While the Caucasian’s natural enemy is still bankrolling a subversive mediacracy alongside “minority” forums agitating for “equal” (preferential) treatment, as theirs crumble we should be launching our own publications with a resounding battle cry: “Damn the Marxists, full truth ahead!”

What Providence hath joined together, let us for no longer than reconciliation may require split asunder. Southern Statesmen have maintained that premise throughout the mediacracy’s rage. Contracts between kindred governments, although broken by infidelity for a time, can still renew in good faith.

New paradigm

Any proposed confederation between or among compatible States should pray for divine guidance at inception, specify a date certain when all provisions must expire completely, yet be of such amenable nature as would renew according to terms agreed upon by its remaining subscribers. Let the proposed confederation anticipate a darker side of human nature, and deter would-be tyrants by providing its ministers with no separate district or meeting place, federal delegates convening periodic sessions at the variously participating State capitols on a rotational basis.

And it matters not how few individuals and States distinguish the advantages of separatism for and among our own White nation right off, only that we begin laying out options worthy of consideration, ideas that thinkers can vote for or against. We’ll get plenty of ridicule, yes, but somebody’s gotta do this.

Mortal constitutions simulate a higher law’s balance of noble aspiration against vulgarity within each culture, but fail when attempting to overrule nature by imagining an earthly perfection that can put those two opposites through its blender. Both good and evil not only endure everywhere, but belong. As separate entities, we shall not during this lifetime awaken from today’s upper dream, but contend until the ultimate hour voting the Golden Rule or libertine abandonment at our daily provocations.

There’s no escaping that fact. Indecision sometimes looks like its opposite, but is it? Only when resulting from mental laziness. With the signage for those avenues ahead unclear as to where they’ll lead us, we’re justified in hesitating. One can choose A or B, alternately None Of The Above, also even another choice: just ignore the whole vote. Nothing more? If you can’t settle for that first option like most people do, nor write in NOTA or decide as a good slave to stay out of it, check with T. Jefferson.

Let’s say FDR calls for all constitutional coinage or Obromney demands your guns, those massas promising stability by issuing paper receipts supposedly of equal value to every potential or actual citizen handing in his genuine money or weaponry; what are the choices? Decision A, comply, or B, elect to dicker and stall in the hope that somebody out in the shrinking mediacracy might remember and invoke Article I or Amendment II respectively.

None Of The Above is a lonely road to travel when the earth underfoot upheaves and trembles, but somebody’s gotta do it. And the time is now.
